VOL. XXI.....NO. 6369. NEW-YORK, SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1872. PRICE FIVE CENTS.

THE STATE CAPITAL.

The Legislature Adjourned Until Monday Week.

Remarkable Scene in the Assembly Yesterday.

A Bill Introduced to Remove the Brooklyn Water Board.

Measures Adopted to Secure Pure Gas in the Sister Cities.

Preparations for the Coming Investigations in New-York.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Saturday, Feb. 17, 1872.

There was scarce a quorum in the Assembly this morning, a large number of members having left on the early trains in order to reach their homes before Sunday. The consequence was a very brief session. The only incident deserving of note in the proceedings was a personal tilt between Mr. ALVORD and Col. HAWKINS, between whom there has not been a very amicable feeling since the latter's speech in the Republican caucus for the Speakership at the beginning of the session. Mr. ALVORD, rising to a question of privilege soon after the reading of the journal, referred to a remark that had been made by a member on the floor yesterday, which he said was insulting to himself and his associates, as well as to the whole House. He had on a former occasion expressed his opinion of the member who was guilty of the remark, and he had only to repeat now, that he was without the instincts of a gentleman, and nothing more nor less than a coward. Col. HAWKINS jumped to his feet and said that that meant him, and he accepted the challenge. He then proceeded to say that he came to this Legislature determined to do what he could to rid New-York of the political hacks that had preyed upon the City for years past, and who came up here every Winter to dissent to influence legislation, and had been here this Winter. No man could charge him with speaking derogatory to the character of any member of this House.

Mr. MACKAY—I charge the gentleman with it.

Col. HAWKINS continued, and said that if he had done so he was sorry for it, and now retracted it. He did not impugn the motives of any man in his official action here, and as for the speech made by him at the caucus referred to, he denied that he had any reference to any particular individual, but intended his remarks to be general.

Mr. ALVORD replied that the constituents of the people had a right to come to Albany to witness the proceedings of the Legislature. He was always glad to see them here, and hence it was that he made no objection yesterday when the most extraordinary spectacle ever witnessed on this floor occurred—the spectacle of a score of members of the Committee of Seventy crowding themselves into the seats of members, sitting behind them, and prompting them in the debates here. He could, by calling for the enforcement of the fifty-seventh rule, have driven all of these gentlemen from the floor of the Chamber; but he had no disposition to do it, and was willing that the friends as well as the opponents of the charter should be here to witness the proceedings.

The Speaker said he thought the question of privilege had been abused in the remarks made on the occasion, and hereafter he should insist upon confining gentlemen who rose to that question strictly to the rule.

The remark of Col. HAWKINS, which drew forth this ebullition, is reported to have been made after the vote on ordering the charter to a third reading yesterday, when Col. HAWKINS said in a loud tone, "Well, we've beaten the d—d thieves at last," alluding to those who had voted in the minority.

THE SEAMAN'S RETREAT.

Mr. GEIS offered a resolution, which was adopted, that the Committee on Commerce and Navigation be authorized, during the recess, to examine the affairs of the Seaman's Retreat on Staten Island with the view to ascertain whether it is not expedient for the State to sell the entire establishment. The Retreat is said to be $50,000 behindhand, but owns considerable real estate which could be sold with advantage to the institution.

NASTY LITERATURE.

J. R. OGILVE, of the Twenty-first Ward, New-York, has brought up a bill which will be introduced after the recess to suppress the circulation of obscene books, illustrated papers and advertisements, and to punish the publishers of the same. Legislation on this subject is asked for by the society for the suppression of these publications. They find difficulty in carrying out their object under existing laws.

NEW-YORK BILLS.

Among the new bills introduced in the Assembly today, affecting New-York and Brooklyn, was one for the appointment of gas inspectors, whose duty it should be to test the quality of gas furnished to citizens by the New-York gas companies, and fix a standard of illuminating power, to be observed by the companies. The bill appoints Profs. DRAPER, BARNARD and DORESKEE as chemists to fix the standard.

Mr. MOULTON introduced a bill providing for the sale by the City authorities of all the public markets below Canal-street.

The bill passed in the House a few days ago, and concurred in by the Senate today, increasing the number of trustees of the Midnight Mission from eight to fifteen, was signed by the Governor this afternoon.

Mr. BENNI introduced a bill to remove the present Water Commissioners of Brooklyn, and authorize the appointment of their successors by the Mayor, Auditor and Controller pending the adoption of a new charter for that city. He also presented a memorial in favor of the bill providing for a convention of the people, consisting of three citizens to be elected from each ward, to frame a charter for Brooklyn.

CROSS-TOWN RAILROAD.

The bill granting a charter for a surface railroad across the City, commencing at the foot of West Twenty-third-street—commonly known as Casey's Cross-town Road—was reported unanimously from the Senate Committee on Railroads this morning.

INVESTIGATIONS DURING THE RECESS.

The Judiciary Committee of the Assembly have four investigations to make in New-York during the recess; first, the charges against the Judges made by the Bar Association; second, the District-Attorney's office; third, the County Clerk's office, and fourth, the Register's office. Some of the investigations will be made by subcommittees. The Committee will meet at the Fifth-avenue Hotel, Monday morning, and lay out the programme of their week's work. The Judiciary investigation will be as public as practicable and the rights of parties will permit, and the accused Judges will be allowed to be present and cross-examine the witnesses against them.

The Committee on Commerce and Navigation is also instructed to make their investigations in New-York during the recess, first, into the conduct of the Health Officer of the Port; second, the Quarantine Commissioners; third, the Emigrant Commission, and fourth, the Seaman's Retreat. They will meet Monday morning at the St. Nicholas Hotel, where all complaints of the abuses in these commissions can be made.

The Standing Committee on State Prisons will visit all those institutions during the recess and examine into their management.

SENATE PROCEEDINGS.

The session of the Senate was even shorter than that of the Assembly, and a considerable portion of the time was spent in Executive Session, a number of Notaries Public being confirmed. Almost the first business transacted was the appointment of a new Clerk, Mr. DAYTON. The appointment was made by resolution; no opposition was made to it, and Mr. DAYTON was immediately sworn in by the Lieutenant-Governor. Soon after the Special Committee appointed to investigate the charges against the late incumbent submitted their report, which was read. The Committee exonerate Mr. TERWILLIGER from the gravest charge contained in the affidavit, which was the foundation of the proceedings against him—that of fraudulently receiving the amount of the bills certified by him, but state that the evidence clearly shows that he has been in the habit of receiving a commission—twenty per cent.—on the amount of the work ordered by him. This practice they pronounced wrong and indefensible, but as he is no longer an officer of the Senate they make no recommendation in the premises. A mass of testimony accompanies the report.

A REFLECTION UPON PRESIDENT GRANT.

Senator JARVIS LORD had the bad taste to offer a preamble and resolutions reflecting in very coarse terms upon the President of the United States. They charged the President with receiving gifts, and called upon him to follow the example of Mr. TERWILLIGER, and resign. The affair was probably intended by the mover as a joke, but it is one that reflects no credit upon him. The resolution was laid on the table, but it should have been returned to the mover, and not entered upon the journal.

SUMMARY OF LEGISLATION.

The present Legislature has done more work in the first half of its session than any of its predecessors for many years past, notwithstanding it has failed to meet all the expectations of the public with regard to speedy action on the reform measures for New-York City. There have been introduced into the Assembly, up to the adjournment today, 644 bills, of which 116 have been acted on by the Standing Committees and reported to the House—90 of them favorably and 26 adversely. One hundred and thirty-one have been passed, and all the general orders now on file, including the New-York charter, have been considered in Committee of the Whole and progressed or ordered to a third reading. In the Senate, 250 bills have been introduced, of which 131 have been reported—all but two of them favorably. One hundred and one bills have been passed. Total number of bills introduced in both Houses, 894; reported, 647; passed, 232. It should also be noted that the present Legislature has surpassed all its predecessors in the number of investigations that it has set on foot into corrupt practices of all sorts, which has occupied a large portion of the time of its members. S.

THE TERWILLIGER CASE.

Report of the Select Committee on the Results of their Investigation.

The following is the report of the Select Committee of the Senate appointed Jan. 30, 1872, to investigate the charges contained in an affidavit of EDWARD GRAGIE against JAMES TERWILLIGER, late Clerk of the Senate:

TO THE SENATE: The Select Committee appointed pursuant to the resolution passed Jan. 30, 1872, "to investigate and report upon the charges contained in an affidavit of EDWARD GRAGIE, dated Dec. 19, 1871, against JAMES TERWILLIGER, Clerk of the Senate," respectfully report that they proceeded to make diligent inquiry into the subject, and at the outset of their investigation endeavored to ascertain the precise charges contained in said affidavit, and found them to be as follows:

First—"That from the 15th day of November, 1869, to Aug. 1, 1870, * * * one-fifth of all amounts collected for printing Senate bills on behalf of said Sergeant-at-Arms was regularly accounted for and paid to said JAMES TERWILLIGER, the Clerk of the Senate, as a bonus or commission," by the firm of WEED, PARSONS & Co., then printing legislative documents, bills and other matter, under and in pursuance of a contract with the Sergeant-at-Arms office.

Second—That frequently during said period the said EDWARD GRAGIE, then employed as sole book-keeper of the said firm, furnished the said TERWILLIGER with bills for printing Senate bills or documents in which the items and accounts were fully and correctly stated, but that the said bills were uniformly returned to deponent, said GRAGIE, with such additions and alterations as to materially increase the amounts of the bills.

Third—"That these altered and fraudulent accounts were uniformly certified as correct by said TERWILLIGER, and collected by the said firm."

In the investigation of these charges your Committee summoned before them and examined EDWARD GRAGIE, JOHN D. PARSONS, of the firm of WEED, PARSONS & CO., JAS. COMSTOCK, Book-keeper for said firm, and HENRY GILLESPIE, Deputy State Controller, after which CHARLES KING testified in behalf of Mr. PARSONS, and Mr. TERWILLIGER in his own behalf. Your Committee also caused an examination to be made of the vouchers on file in the office of the Controller of the State, rendered by WEED, PARSONS & CO. for printing done for the State, for the period aforesaid; also an examination of the account-books and ledgers in which the accounts for printing were kept during said period by said firm, and also the Senate journals and documents covering the period in question, and from the testimony and proofs the following facts appear:

First—As to charges second and third, they were not supported by any proof except that which was given relating to one bill which had been altered by increasing the sum of the charges. This bill was made by WEED, PARSONS & CO., and embraced two items, viz.: One for printing testimony, &c., for Banking Committee of the Senate relating to increase of capital stock, &c., charged under date of March 12, 1869, and the other for printing testimony, &c., for Select Committee of the Senate, appointed April 10, 1868, charged under date of April 27, 1869. These items were respectively increased as follows: The first item was first charged at $[illegible] 41, and subsequently increased to $[illegible] 41. The second item was first charged at $960, and afterward increased to $1,152, and subsequently again increased to $1,920. The aggregate of the bill as finally charged was $2,750 41. This bill was certified to by TERWILLIGER as Clerk, and a warrant for the payment thereof was drawn by the Controller on the Treasurer of the State. The certificate bears date May 21, 1869, and the warrant for the payment thereof June 7, 1869.

There is no testimony showing that Mr. TERWILLIGER knew of this bill, or had any knowledge previous to its alteration of the additions that were made to it.

Mr. JOHN D. PARSONS, one of the firm of WEED, PARSONS & CO., testified that the charges were made in the first instance by his son, who was not conversant with such work; that the printing was done by piece-meal, and was of a character which compelled them to work upon it nights with extra help, and that for these reasons he (the witness) made the alterations and additions to the bill, believing that the charges as finally fixed, were no more than a just and fair compensation for the work done.

As to charge first. It appears that TERWILLIGER was Clerk of the Senate from the second day of January, 1866, to the thirty-first day of December, 1869, and that during that period WEED, PARSONS & CO. did department printing under a contract with the State. That during the period specified in GRAGIE'S affidavit the firm paid to TERWILLIGER twenty per cent. on certain printing done for the State. This per centum was made up of the following credits, including that which was allowed on the altered bill, viz.:

	Amount.	Per Cent.
Twenty per cent. for printing for Constitutional Convention	$10,189 23	$2,038 47
Twenty per cent. charges paid for miscellaneous account to May 17, 1869	4,115 00	823 00
Twenty per cent. charges for Senate work	5,295 00	1,059 00
Twenty per cent. printing for Railroad Committee	2,739 00	547 80
Twenty per cent. printing miscellaneous account to Dec. 31, 1869	948 00	189 60
Total charges for printing	$23,186 23	$4,637 24

That this per centum was paid to TERWILLIGER at the times and in the manner following, to-wit:

1869, May 21	$[illegible]
1869, Dec. 30	[illegible]
1869, Dec. 30	[illegible]
1869, May 17	[illegible]
1870, July 1	[illegible]
Total payments	$4,637 24

That the printing on which the per centum was paid, as above stated, was done between the 2d day of January, 1866, and the 30th day of December, 1869.

Your Committee, in connection with the facts found, have reported the testimony and proofs taken before them. It is claimed that the moneys paid as per centum were paid and received under a usage which has prevailed in respect to legislative printing for a number of years. Your Committee are of the opinion that the practice of paying and receiving the per centum by the officers of the Senate on printing done for the State is highly reprehensible, as being personal in its character, within the principle, and manifestly against public policy. The usage, even though it has prevailed for years, does not, in the opinion of your Committee, afford any justification to those who avail themselves of it. All which is respectfully submitted.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

Debate on the Postal Telegraph—Visit of the President to the Agricultural Convention—Business in the Case of the North Carolina Senatorship.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—The House met for general debate, as in Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCKEE in the chair. The Hall presented the usual Saturday appearance of empty seats and deserted galleries. Mr. PALMER, of Iowa, advocated a union of the postal and telegraph services, quoting the averages of private and press messages in Europe and the United States, and claiming that they are much less in the former than in the latter. He quoted Mr. BECK as saying that the average amount of social messages in the United States is less than two per cent. of the whole number, and stated that in Europe the social messages amount to sixty per cent. of the whole amount. He argued that the telegraph in this country is too potent to be left in private hands, and as an agent of commerce it ought to be under the control of the General Government.

THE AGRICULTURAL CONVENTION.

The Agricultural Convention did considerable business today, adopting a resolution urging upon Congress additional liberal donations of land for existing and future agricultural colleges, and making other provisions to further the interest of agriculture and education. Mr. LORING welcomed him in a brief speech, after which the President took a seat on the platform.

PROBABLE HOMICIDE.

Tragic Occurrence in a Beer Saloon—The Result of "Skylarking"—A Man Shot by his Friend.

At about 5 o'clock last evening, a tragic affair occurred in the lager-beer saloon of PHILIP HLEMMELE, in the basement of the building No. 20 Chambers-street, which it is feared will result in the death of one of the participants. At that time there were in the saloon DANIEL O'CONNELL, a native of Ireland, forty-two years of age, living at No. 107 Charlton-street, and ALFRED PARRY, an Englishman, about thirty-five years of age, who resides at No. 109 Bowery-street, Brooklyn, besides a number of other persons. O'CONNELL and PARRY were intimate friends, having known each other for perhaps fifteen years, and had never had any quarrel. O'CONNELL was formerly a speculator in timber lands, and was at one time in very comfortable circumstances, but of late years had taken to excessive indulgence in spirituous liquors, neglected his business, and had in consequence become considerably reduced in circumstances. He is married, and has several grown-up children.

PARRY is also a married man, and has four small children. He is employed in a sugar-refinery in Brooklyn. Both the men had been in the saloon drinking together for some time. O'CONNELL was considerably the worse for liquor, but PARRY was sober. Mr. CHARLES D. EVANS, a lawyer at No. 35 Chambers-street, and living in Ross-street, Williamsburg, who is personally intimate with both the men, and was present during the affair and witnessed the whole of it, made a statement to a Times reporter, from which it appears that while drinking together the men began "skylarking," pushing each other, to see which could shove the hardest. They continued the good-humoredly for some time, when O'CONNELL pushed PARRY with special force, almost knocking him down. PARRY recovered in a jocular manner, "Now, DAN, that blow was too hard; I'm going to shoot you for that," at the same time drawing a revolver from his pocket and pointing it at O'CONNELL. The latter grasped the pistol and a scuffle, lasting butts moment, ensued, during the which the pistol was discharged. O'CONNELL cried, "You've shot me!," and sank to the floor. He was picked up and placed in a chair, and a physician was summoned. Mr. EVANS stated most positively that he was convinced that PARRY was only joking when he pointed the pistol at O'CONNELL, and that the shooting was accidental.

Patrolman AHERN, of the third Precinct Police, was passing the saloon at the time, and hearing the report of the pistol entered the place and arrested PARRY. The wounded man was then removed to the Park Hospital, where the wound was examined by Dr. VANDEWATER, the House surgeon. He was found that the bullet from the pistol had entered the right cheek and passed out of the left cheek, causing a highly dangerous wound. Dr. VANDEWATER considers the patient to be in a highly critical condition. PARRY was taken by the officer to the bedside of the wounded man, who fully identified him as the man who had shot him. O'CONNELL was still laboring under the effect of the liquor which he had taken, and said that PARRY had shot him intentionally. This charge PARRY denies most positively, and says the shooting was accidental. He pointed the pistol at O'CONNELL in a jocular manner, and the latter grasped the weapon, and during the scuffle the pistol was discharged. He appeared to be overwhelmed with grief at the unexpected and sad result of his very reprehensible joke, and said that he was on the best of terms with O'CONNELL, and had not quarreled with him in the most remote manner. PARRY was taken to the Chambers-street Police Station and locked up, to await the result of the injuries.

The Sting and the Redingote—Tweed and Sweeny in Close and Secret Consultation.

Matters around the City Hall were unusually quiet yesterday. The whereabouts of ISCOCOLL and WOODWARD is still a mystery to the Sheriff's officers, although they still continue to scour the several States where the fugitives have been seen or heard from. Sheriff BRENNAN fully expects to have them in his custody during next week, although he declines to give his reasons for this statement beyond the fact that he is in constant communication by telegraph with his detectives. TWEED and SWEENY had a long consultation yesterday, and it is said that CONNOLLY was represented, but the purport of the meeting was kept secret. Mayor HALL was at his office throughout the day. His friends are getting uneasy at his prolonged absence, which has now lasted for a week, it appearing that Chief Justice DALY, who had been asked to preside at the trial, had made previous arrangements to decide a case in which Judge CURTIS, of Boston, has to appear as a witness. As stated in yesterday's TIMES, Mayor HALL will defend himself, assisted by his partner, Mr. VANDERPOOL. Attorney-General BARLOW will prosecute in person, while WHEELER H. PECKHAM will represent the Committee of Seventy.

Serious Accident on Fourth-avenue.

At about 4½ o'clock yesterday afternoon, JAMES WATSON, aged fifty-two, of No. 324 West Fifty-second-street, was driving a horse and wagon across the railroad-track, on Fourth-avenue and Sixty-sixth-street, when his horse took fright at an approaching train and became ungovernable. Before he could clear the track, he was run into by a Hudson River Railroad train. The horse was instantly killed, the wagon badly demolished, and Mr. WATSON was dangerously injured. He was taken to the Roosevelt Hospital in an ambulance.

The activity of the Bonapartist agents, who are scrambling throughout France to secure the return of the Ex-Emperor, creates some excitement in parliamentary circles at Versailles.

Trial for the Murder of Dominican Priests.

Three of the prisoners were found guilty of murder, and were condemned to death. Nine others were convicted of complicity in the crime, and awarded various terms of imprisonment. M. Preparations for Thanksgiving Celebrations at the Recovery of the Prince of Wales.

LONDON, Feb. 17.—The thanksgiving services at St. Paul's Cathedral on the 27th inst., and the royal procession to the church, promise to be two of the most imposing spectacles ever witnessed in this city. The residents and storekeepers on the Strand, Fleet-street, Ludgate Hill, Oxford Road and Holborn, are making the most lavish preparations to decorate their houses. The people are eager to witness the demonstration, and are paying fabulous prices for positions in windows and on house-tops along the route. Seats are being erected on every available space in St. Paul's Church-yard. A triumphal arch, under which the procession will pass, is being erected at the foot of Ludgate Hill.

BROOKLYN NEWS.

Heavy Robbery on Prospect-street.

While JAMES CALLIGAN, who lives at the corner of Prospect and Navy streets, Brooklyn, was at supper with his family, yesterday, three men, named DANIEL KELLY, JOHN KELLY and DAVID WALSH, entered the house secretly, made their way to his room, with which they were well acquainted, and took $1,865 from his trunk. They immediately decamped, but CALLIGAN knew who they were from the marks of their work. The two KELLYS are nephews of his, and until recently boarded in his house.

The Committee of Fifty—A Calm Executive Session Last Night.

The report of the important meeting of the Brooklyn Committee of Fifty, published exclusively in the TIMES of yesterday, created no little astonishment among the members of that body, several of whom were visited, yesterday, by a TIMES representative. They invariably expressed gratification with the fairness with which the whole subject was treated. One gentleman remarked that he had read it with great pleasure, and another that it was the only one of the many articles published on the subject of the Committee which he had cut out for preservation.

It was expected that business of some importance would be transacted by the Committee last evening, but the meeting was of a quiet character. A full report of the Subcommittee on the Excise Board was read, and ordered to be given to the Press. It will be ready on Monday. The Subcommittee on the charter made a partial report, which was referred for Tuesday. The Subcommittee on the Water Board reported and were discharged. Another was appointed, consisting of ten members, with power to increase their number. The matter of the whitewash letter seem to have been dropped, the rejection of the resolutions of Friday night being deemed an end of the matter.

Alleged Highwaymen.

SIMON KENIG, aged nineteen, of No. 113 Cedar-street, and BARTHOLOMEW UTTON, alias Bolivar, were arraigned before Justice HOGAN, at the Tombs, yesterday, charged with having, on Friday night, attacked WM. RAM, of No. 100 Madison-street, while he was passing through Chatham-street, knocked him down and attempted to rob him of his watch, valued at $65. Before the face-pads could escape, they were captured by Detective FIRE, of the Fourth Precinct, and Justice HOGAN sent them to the Tombs for trial.

An Act for the Benefit of Insane Hundreds.

Whenever any person shall be charged with any crime, and punishment for which is death or imprisonment in the penitentiary, shall plead insanity as a defense, he shall, at the same time in the same manner as it is now plead, be tried, and, if convicted, judgment shall be rendered and sentence passed as in other cases provided.

Such convict, setting up such plea of insanity, shall undergo the same examination, under the direction of the Court, as is provided by law for the admission of innocent insane persons to other insane asylums in this State, and, if declared insane, shall be confined in the insane asylum, provided for in section 1 of this act, until such time as, in the opinion of the superintendent of said asylum, they shall be cured, when they shall be transferred to the Penitentiary proper, and there confined until the expiration of the time for which they had been sentenced.

THE SUICIDAL MANIA.

Two Suicides Yesterday—A Mysterious Case—A German Leaves His Wife and Seven Children—A Man in Delirium Tremens Takes Laudanum to End His Life.

PATRICK MCGRAW, an Irish tailor, 50 years of age, residing at No. 220 Mulberry-street, committed suicide yesterday, by swallowing a quantity of Paris-green, a most virulent poison. MCGRAW had been in poor health for several months past, and complained very often of terrible pains in his head. During the past week his conduct had been so strange as to lead his neighbors to suppose that he was insane. He was a bachelor, and occupied a room alone in the above-named house. It is believed that his illness and the suffering consequent thereon unsettled his mind and induced him to terminate his existence.

JACOB MAURER, a native of Germany, fifty-two years of age, who, with his family, occupied apartments at No. 206 Stanton-street, committed suicide yesterday morning by hanging himself. No cause can be assigned for his act of self-destruction. MAURER was in fair health, and arose yesterday morning and breakfasted with his family as usual. Soon after breakfast he was missed, and after several hours being consumed in the search he was found suspended by the neck with a clothes-line to the beams of the garret ceiling. When discovered the body was cold, and it is therefore supposed that life had been extinct for several hours.

Mr. GEO. W. ARMOUR, of No. 722 Sixth-avenue, has been missing from his home since Thursday evening, and it is feared by his friends and relatives that he has committed suicide. The missing man was forty-seven years of age on the day of his disappearance. He is a native of this City, and his family consists of his wife and seven children. For some years past he had been employed as "time-spotter" on the Sixth-avenue Railroad. On Thursday evening he returned home, partook of his supper, and went out again as usual to attend to his duties. Before going, he changed his overcoat, putting on a long dark coat instead of the lighter one which he had worn during the day. He was seen at 11 o'clock that night at Booth's Theatre attending to the cars there, and again shortly after midnight watching the cars in Vesey-street. Since that time he has disappeared completely, and so far as can be learned he has thus far proved unavailing. It is supposed that he has committed suicide, from the fact that in a pocket of the overcoat, which he had left at home, was found a letter addressed to his wife, and which reads as follows:

Mrs. Armour:

I am forty-seven years of age today; I am tired of life; I have lived forty-seven years of a life useful to nobody, and not even useful to myself. I sold my watch to my brother-in-law Jones, today, for $20; you will find the money in my box and the key in my pocket. Good-bye. God bless you. I hope God will forgive me for what I am about to do.

GEO. W. ARMOUR.

The Police are in search of the missing individual.

Yesterday afternoon, PATRICK HUGHES, residing in Eleventh-avenue, near Fifty-eighth-street, while suffering from an attack of delirium tremens, attempted to terminate his existence by swallowing a quantity of landanum. He was attended by Police Surgeon RABORG and cared for at the Roosevelt Hospital.

THE WEATHER.

Events and Probabilities.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17—7 P. M.—The barometer has risen since Friday afternoon from New-England to the Ohio Valley and the lakes; and clear weather with falling temperature prevails east of New-York. The lowest barometer has moved from Kentucky to Cape Hatteras, attended by fresh north-east winds from New-York to Virginia, and westward over the lakes. Very cold weather with occasional light snow is reported from Virginia north and westward. Westerly winds have prevailed on the Gulf Coast. The storm which, Saturday morning, threatened Southern Florida has now passed away, and clear or clearing weather apparently prevails from the Gulf States northward. Light northerly winds and seasonable temperature are reported in the Mississippi Valley and rain on the California coast. The rivers have risen four feet at Cincinnati and fallen one foot at Pittsburg.

PROBABILITIES.

The low barometer over Cape Hatteras will probably move north-eastward with the Gulf Stream, and north-west winds and cloudy weather continue over the Middle Atlantic States, with rain or snow, will probably continue in the Gulf States with light wind; cloudy weather prevail in the Ohio Valley, clearing away Sunday afternoon; clear and cold weather continue with northerly winds in New-England. Dangerous winds are not anticipated for the Atlantic and Gulf coasts Saturday night.

SUPPLEMENTARY WEATHER REPORT.

Snow has been reported from Baltimore, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Knoxville, Louisville, Lynchburg, Norfolk, Pittsburg, Rochester, Virginia City and Washington City, and rain from Augusta, Corinne and Knoxville, preceding the snow-storm, from Leavenworth, Nashville and Norfolk, previous to the snow now falling, and from San Francisco and Wilmington; brisk south-westerly winds continued last night at Fort Benton. A very severe blizzard has succeeded the hurricane previously reported from the summit of Mount Washington. Fog was reported this morning from Davenport, New-York and Omaha. The temperature at Key West this evening was 76°; at Galveston, Jacksonville, Lake City and Punta Rassor, 60° at New-Orleans, 57°; at San Francisco, 54°.

IN NEW-YORK CITY.

During the day, yesterday, the weather was pleasant. It became suddenly cold at sunset. The thermometer stood thus: At 6 A. M., 29°; 11 A. M., 30°; 2 P. M., 32°; 9 P. M., 22°. Barometer, 30.16, 30.06, 30.18, 30.32. Corresponding date last year: Thermometer, 32°, 42°, 47°, 40°. The indications are for cold weather.

Tweed Arouses His "Tigers"—He Utters a Brief Growl.

The Americus Club has held its annual meeting and re-elected WM. M. TWEED President. "HANK" SMITH was made Vice-President; CHARLES H. HALL, Secretary, and JOSEPH HARRISON, Treasurer. TWEED presided at the meeting, and made a speech, returning his thanks to the Club for his re-election. He said his time had hitherto been taken up with politics, and was at present much occupied with the litigation pending against him. He looked forward to the moment when he should be absolved from all these cares, and then he would devote his whole attention to the welfare of the Americus Club.

The Atalanta's International Challenge Accepted.

There is to be another international rowing match. The challenge of the Atalantas, of this City, to the London Rowing Club, the champion amateur oarsmen of Great Britain, for a four-oared shell-race on the Thames, from Putney to Mortlake, has been accepted. The Atalantas, yesterday, received the following telegram from London, from the President of the challenged Club: "My Club accepts challenge. Letter will follow."

A Leap in the Dark—A Colored Man Flying from the Police.

At about 3 o'clock yesterday morning, while BENJAMIN GRAHAM, a colored man, aged twenty, and residing at No. 71 Broome-street, was in the house No. 12 York-street, which is a resort for colored disreputable characters, two Policemen called at the house in search of some colored persons who they had reason to believe had taken refuge there. GRAHAM was aroused by the entrance of the officers, and thinking perhaps that they were in search of him, he sprang out of a second-story window, and striking on the sidewalk, received serious injuries. He was picked up by the Police and taken to the Leonard-street Station, where he was attended by Police-Surgeon GETON. He was subsequently taken home.

Held on a Home Charge.

At 10 o'clock last night, Capt. JOHN GUNNER, of the Nineteenth Precinct, with a section of his command, made a raid on the keno game located at No. 229 Third-avenue, and arrested seven men who were found on the entrance of the Police charged in the interesting game of keno. The prisoners, who gave their names as Edward Hope, Gabriel Cunningham, James Hughes, Geo. Kadricck, Samuel Swift, James Smith and Wm. A. Moody, were taken to the East Fifty-ninth-street Police Station and locked up to await examination. The Police also seized all the gaming implements found in the place, and took them to the station-house.

THE SNOW BLOCKADE.

Arrival of Eastern Trains on the Union Pacific Railroad at Ogden—Sufferings of the Passengers—Present Condition of the Road.

SALT LAKE, Feb. 17.—The trains from the East so long blockaded by snow at Laramie Plains arrived at Ogden today, and this afternoon the regular and special trains on the Utah Central brought travelers and mails seemingly without end. The experiences of the travelers differ, but most of them denounce the management of the Union Pacific without stint, saying there was no excuse for such long delay and hardships, and that with reasonable energy and determination on the part of officials who understood their business the blockade could have been raised or passed two weeks ago. A number threaten suit against the Company for damages. Several arrived here today, among them some ladies utterly worn out, prostrated and sick from their trials. Among the passengers this evening was Gen. ORD, commanding the Department of the Platte, on official business for Camp Douglas. The opening of the Union Pacific Railroad causes great joy.

OMAHA, Nebraska, Feb. 17.—Five trains which left here from Jan. 13 to Feb. 1, arrived at Ogden today. The passengers bitterly complain of the treatment they received along the road. Reports from the snow blockade district say that no trains have arrived from the West. More snow is falling at Medicine Bow.

More Bad News—The Trains Again Snow Bound.

SALT LAKE, Feb. 17.—Bad news has again been received from the snow-belt on the Union Pacific Railroad. Gen. ORD has just arrived here with advices that the trains are again snow-bound between Medicine Bow and Rawlins and Lookout. There is no hope of the Eastern-bound trains getting through at present. The trains passing Evanston to-night, Westward, just escape the new blockade.

NEW-ORLEANS.

Success of the Citizens' Meeting Last Night—Reform Resolutions Adopted.

NEW-ORLEANS, Feb. 17.—The citizens meeting in Lafayette-square, in response to the call by the Committee of Fifty-one, was large and enthusiastic. WM. RANDOLPH presided. The meeting was addressed by H. N. OGDEN, R. H. MARS, JOHN H. KENNARD and J. HENRY BURGIN. The following resolutions were introduced by JOHN R. SHAKESPEARE, and were adopted:

Resolved, That a Convention of the people of the whole State be called to meet in New-Orleans on April 22, to adopt a platform of principles for the Reform Party, to accordingly to the Turgoside address, and nominate candidates for State offices.

Resolved, That all men of all parties, regardless of color or previous political associations, who favor a reform of the abuses under which the State and City now suffer, are cordially invited to co-operate in this movement.

The third resolution provides for the appointment of delegates.

Resolved, That the sportsmanship for delegates to this Convention be promptly made by the Provisional Central Committee on such a basis as will secure a fair representation to the whole State and City.

Resolved, That the Press throughout the State favorable to reform, be urged to give this movement their earnest support.

These resolutions were preceded by a long address, setting forth the necessity for Reform Party, &c.

COAL-MINING.

Man and Machine Power Employed in Pennsylvania in the Production of Anthracite Coal.

From the Pottsville Miners' Journal, Feb. 17.

The quantity of anthracite coal mined and sent to market

	Tons.
In 1871 was	14,695,601
Estimated consumption in regions	2,750,000
Total production in 1871	17,454,561

To produce this quantity of coal and transport it to market, but few persons can form any idea of the magnitude of the investments, and the power of men and machinery required. We have, through the courtesy of the mining engineers and their clerks, been enabled to collect some full statistics connected with the production.

In the first place the investments in railroads and canals built expressly for the anthracite coal trade, with their equipments and investments in the coal regions, without the land, will foot up not less than $200,000,000.

The number of persons employed to mine the coal, and the number of engines, together with the aggregate horse-power required to lift it from the mines, prepare it for market, pump out the water and ventilate the mines, is given below:

	Number of persons employed.	Number steam engines.	Horse-power.

THE WATCH OF BOON ISLAND.

They crossed the lonely and lamenting sea;
Its moaning seemed but singing. "Will thou dare,"
He asked her, "brave the loneliness with me?"
"What loneliness," she said, "if thou art there?"

A'far and cold on the horizon's rim
Loomed the tall light-house, like a ghostly sign;
They sighed not as the shore behind grew dim,
A rose of joy they bore across the brine.

They gained the barren rock, and made their home
Among the wild waves and the sea-birds wild;
The wintry winds blew fierce across the foam,
But in each other's eyes they looked and smiled.

Aloft the light-house cast its warning wide,
Fed by their faithful hands, and ships in sight
With joy beheld it, and on land man cried,
"Look, clear and steady burns Boon Island light!"

And, while they trimmed the lamp with busy hands,
"Shine far and through the dark, sweet light," they cried;
"Bring safely back the sailors from all lands
To waiting love,—wife, mother, sister, bride!"

No tempest shook their calm, though many a storm
Tore the vexed ocean into furious spray;
No chill could find them in their Eden warm,
And gently Time lapped onward day by day.

Said I no chill could find them? There is one
Whose awful footfalls everywhere are known,
With echoing sobs, who chills the Summer sun,
And turns the happy heart of youth to stone.

Inexorable Death, a silent guest
At every hearth, before whose footsteps flee
All joys, who rules the earth, and, without rest,
Roams the vast shuddering spaces of the sea;

Death found them; turned his face and passed her by.
But laid a finger on her lover's lips,
And there was silence. Then the storm ran high,
And tossed and troubled sore the distant ships.

Nay, who shall speak the terrors of the night,
The speechless sorrow, the supreme despair?
Still, like a ghost, she trimmed the waning light,
Dragging her slow weight up the winding stair.

With more than oil the saving lamp she fed,
While lashed to madness the wild sea she heard;
She kept her awful vigil with the dead,
And God's sweet pity still she ministered.

O sailors, hailing loud the cheerful beam
Piercing so far the tumult of the dark,
A radiant star of hope, you could not dream
What misery there sat cherishing that spark!

Three times the night, too terrible to bear,
Descended, shrouded in the storm. At last
The sun rose clear and still on her despair,
And all her striving to the winds she cast,

And bowed her head and let the light die out,
For the wide sea lay calm as her dead love.
When evening fell, from the far land, in doubt,
Vainly to find that faithful star she strove.

Sailors and landsmen look, and women's eyes,
For pity ready, search in vain the night,
And wondering neighbor unto neighbor cries,
"Now what, think you, can ail Boon Island light?"

Out from the coast toward her high tower they sailed;
They found her watching, silent, by her dead,
A shadowy woman, who nor wept nor wailed,
But answered what they spake, till all was said.

They bore the dead and living both away.
With anguish time seemed powerless to destroy
She turned, and backward gazed across the bay,—
Lost in the sad sea lay her rose of joy.

HOW SANTA CLAUS CAME TO SIMPSON'S BAR.

It had been raining in the valley of the Sacramento. The North Fork had overflowed its banks and Rattlesnake Creek was impassable. The few boulders that had marked the Summer ford at Simpson's Crossing were obliterated by a vast sheet of water stretching to the foothills. The up stage was stopped at Granger's; the last mail had been abandoned in the tules, the rider swimming for his life. "An area," remarked the Sierra Avalanche with pensive local pride, "as large as the State of Massachusetts is now under water."

Nor was the weather any better in the foothills. The mud lay deep on the mountain road; wagons that neither physical force nor moral objurgation could move from the evil ways into which they had fallen, incumbered the track, and the way to Simpson's Bar was indicated by broken-down teams and hard swearing. And farther on, cut-off and inaccessible, rained upon and bedraggled, smitten by high winds and threatened by high water, Simpson's Bar on the eve of Christmas day, 1862, clung like a swallow's nest to the rocky entablature and splintered capitals of Table Mountain, and shook in the blast.

As night shut down on the settlement, a few lights gleamed through the mist from the windows of cabins on either side of the highway now crossed and gullied by lawless streams and swept by marauding winds. Happily most of the population were gathered at Thompson's store, clustered around a red-hot stove, at which they silently spat in some accepted sense of social communion that perhaps rendered conversation unnecessary. Indeed, most methods of diversion had long since been exhausted on Simpson's Bar; high water had suspended the regular occupations on gulch and on river, and a consequent lack of money and whisky had taken the zest from most illegitimate recreation. Even Mr. Hamlin was fain to leave the Bar with fifty dollars in his pocket—the only amount actually realized of the large sums won by him in the successful exercise of his arduous profession. "Ef I was asked," he remarked somewhat later—"ef I was asked to pint out a purty little village where a retired sport as didn't care for money could exercise hisself frequent and lively, I'd say Simpson's Bar; but for a young man with a large family depending on his exertions, it don't pay." As Mr. Hamlin's family consisted mainly of female adults, this remark is quoted rather to show the breadth of his humor than the exact extent of his responsibilities.

Howbeit, the unconscious objects of this satire sat that evening in the listless apathy begotten of idleness and lack of excitement. Even the sudden splashing of hoofs before the door did not arouse them. Dick Bullen alone paused in the act of scraping out his pipe, and lifted his head, but no other one of the group indicated any interest in, or recognition of, the man who entered.

He was a figure familiar enough to the company, and known in Simpson's Bar as "The Old Man." A man of perhaps fifty years; grizzled and scant of hair, but still fresh and youthful of complexion. A face full of ready, but not very powerful sympathy, with a chameleon-like aptitude for taking on the shade and color of contiguous moods and feelings. He had evidently just left some hilarious companions, and did not at first notice the gravity of the group, but clapped the shoulder of the nearest man jocularly, and threw himself into a vacant chair.

"Jest heard the best thing out, boys! Ye know Smiley, over yar—Jim Smiley—funniest man in the Bar! Well, Jim was jest telling the richest yarn about—"

"Smiley's a —— fool," interrupted a gloomy voice.

"A particular —— skunk," added another in sepulchral accents.

A silence followed these positive statements. The Old Man glanced quickly around the group. Then his face slowly changed. "That's so," he said reflectively, after a pause, "certingly a sort of a skunk and sthink of a foot, in course." He was silent for a moment as in painful contemplation of the unsavoriness and folly of the unpopular Smiley. "Diamel weather, ain't it?" he added, now fully embarked on the current of prevailing sentiment. "Mighty rough papers on the boys, and no show for money this season. And to-morrow's Christmas."

There was a movement among the men at this announcement, but whether of satisfaction or disgust was not plain. "I kin," continued the Old Man in the lugubrious tone he had within the last few moments unconsciously adopted—"yes, Christmas, and to-night's Christmas Eve. Ye see, boys, I kinder thought—that is, I sorter had an idee, jest passin like you know—that may-be ye'd all like to come over to my house to-night and have a sort of tear round. But I suppose, now, you wouldn't? Don't feel like it, may be?" he added with acrimonious sympathy, peering into the faces of his companions.

"Well, I don't know," responded Tom Flynn, with some cheerfulness. "P'r'aps we may. But how about your wife, Old Man? What does she say to it?"

The Old Man hesitated. His conjugal experience had not been a happy one, and the fact was known to Simpson's Bar. His first wife, a delicate, pretty little woman, had suffered keenly and secretly from the jealous suspicions of her husband, until one day he invited the whole Bar to his house to expose her infidelity. On arriving, the party found the shy, timid creature quietly engaged in her household duties, and retired abashed and discomfitted. But the sensitive woman did not easily recover from the shock of this extraordinary outrage. It was with difficulty she regained her equanimity sufficiently to release her lover from the closet in which he was concealed and escape with him. She left a boy of three years to comfort her bereaved husband. The Old Man's present wife had been his cook. She was large, loyal and aggressive.

Before he could reply, Joe Dimmick suggested with great directness that it was "the Old Man's house," and that, invoking the Divine Power, if the case were his own, he would write who he pleased, even if in so doing he imperiled his salvation. The Powers of Evil, he further remarked, should contend against him vainly. All this delivered with a terseness and vigor lost in this necessary translation.

"In course. Certainly. That's it," said the Old Man with a sympathetic frown. "Thar's no trouble about that. It's my own house, built every stick on it myself. Don't you be afeared o' her, boys. She may out up a trifle rough—ez wimmin do—but she'll come round." Secretly the Old Man trusted to the exaltation of liquor and the power of a courageous example to sustain him in such an emergency.

At yet, Dick Bullen, the oracle and leader of Simpson's Bar, had not spoken. He now took his pipe from his lips. "Old Man, how's that yer Johnny gettin' on? Seems to me he didn't look so pearly the last time I seed him on the bluff heavin' rocks at Chinaman. Didn't seem to take much interest in it. Thar was a gang of 'em by yar yesterday—drownded out up the river—and I kinder thought o' Johnny, and how he'd miss 'em! May be now, we'd be in the way of he wus sick?"

The father, evidently touched not only by this pathetic picture of Johnny's deprivation, but by the considerate delicacy of the speaker, hastened to assure him that Johnny was better, and that a "little fun might 'liven him up." Whereupon Dick arose, shook himself, and saying, "I'm ready. Lead the way, Old Man; here goes," himself led the way with a leap, a characteristic howl, and dared out into the night. As he passed through the outer room he caught up a blazing brand from the hearth. This action was repeated by the rest of the party, closely following and elbowing each other, and before the astonished proprietor of Thompson's grocery was aware of the intention of his guests, the room was deserted.

The night was pitchy dark. In the first gust of wind their temporary torches were extinguished, and only the red brands dancing and flitting in the gloom like drunken will-o'-the-wisps indicated their whereabouts. Their way led up Pine Tree Cañon, at the head of which a broad, low bark-thatched cabin burrowed in the mountain-side. It was the home of the Old Man, and the entrance to the tunnel in which he worked when he worked at all. Here the crowd paused for a moment, out of delicate deference to their host, who came up panting in the rear.

"P'raps ye'd better hold on a second out yer, whilst I go in and see that things is all right," said the Old Man with an indifference he was far from feeling. The suggestion was graciously accepted, the door opened and closed on the host, and the crowd, leaning their backs against the wall and cowering under the eaves, waited and listened.

For a few moments there was no sound but the dripping of water from the eaves, and the stir and rustle of wrestling boughs above them. Then the men became uneasy, and whispered suggestion and suspicion passed from the one to the other. "Reckon she's caved in his head the first lick!" "Decoyed him inter the tunnel, and barred him up, likely." "Got him down, and sittin' on him." "Prob'ly bilin suthin to heave on us; stand clear the door, boys!" For just then the latch clicked, the door slowly opened, and a voice said, "Come in out o' the wet."

The voice was neither that of the Old Man nor of his wife. It was the voice of a small boy, its weak treble broken by that preternatural hoarseness which only vagabondage and the habit of premature self-assertion can give. It was the face of a small boy that looked up at them—a face that might have been pretty and even refined, but that it was darkened by evil knowledge from within, and dirt and hard experience from without. He had a blanket around his shoulders, and had evidently just risen from his bed. "Come in," he repeated, "and don't make no noise. The Old Man's in there talkin' to mar," he continued, pointing to an adjacent room which seemed to be a kitchen from which the Old Man's voice came in deprecating accents. "Let me be," he added, querulously to Dick Bullen who had caught him up, blanket and all, and was affecting to toss him into the fire, "let go o' me you d—d old fool, d'ye hear?"

Thus adjured, Dick Bullen lowered Johnny to the ground with a smothered laugh, while the men, entering quietly, ranged themselves around a long table of rough boards which occupied the centre of the room. Johnny then gravely proceeded to a cupboard and brought out several articles which he deposited on the table. "Thar's whiskey and crackers and red herons and cheese." He took a bite of the latter on his way to the table. "And sugar." He scooped up a mouthful en route with a small and very dirty hand. "And terbacker. Thar's dried apples too on the shelf, but I don't admire 'em. Apples is swellin'. Thar," he concluded, "now wade in, and don't be afeard. I don't mind the old woman. She don't b'long to me. Sling."

He had stepped to the threshold of a small room, scarcely larger than a closet, partitioned off from the main apartment, and holding in its dim recess a small bed. He stood there a moment looking at the company, his bare feet peeping from the blanket, and nodded.

"Hello, Johnny! You ain't goin' to turn in agin, are ye?" said Dick.

"Yes, I are," responded Johnny, decidedly.

"Why, wot's up, old fellow?"

"I'm sick."

"How sick?"

"I've got a fevier. And childblains. And roematis," returned Johnny, and vanished within. After a moment's pause, he added in the dark, apparently from under the bedclothes,—"And biles!"

There was an embarrassing silence. The men looked at each other, and at the fire. Even with the appetizing banquet before them, it seemed as if they might again fall into the despondency of Thompson's grocery, when the voice of the Old Man, incautiously lifted, came depressingly from the kitchen.

"Certainly! That's so. In course they is. A gang o' lazy drunken loafers, and that ar Dick Bullen's the ornariest of all. Don't hev no more sabe than to come round yar with sickness in the house and no provision. That's what I said: 'Bullen,' ses I, 'it's crazy drunk you are, or a fool,' ses I, 'to think o' such a thing.' 'Staples,' I ses, 'he you a man, Staples, and speet to raise h—ll under my roof and invalida lyin' round?' But they would come—they would. That's wot you must speet o' such trash as lays round the Bar."

A burst of laughter from the men followed this unfortunate exposure. Whether it was overheard in the kitchen, or whether the Old Man's irate companion had just then exhausted all other modes of expressing her contemptuous indignation, I cannot say, but a back door was suddenly slammed with great violence. A moment later and the Old Man reappeared, hoarly unconscious of the cause of the late hilarious outburst, and smiled blandly.

"The old woman thought she'd jest run over to Mrs. Hofadden's for a sociable call," he explained, with jaunty indifference, as he took a seat at the board.

Oddly enough to needed this outward incident to relieve the embarrassment that was beginning to be felt by the party, and their natural audacity returned with their host. I do not propose to record the convivialities of that evening. The inquisitive reader will accept the statement that the conversation was characterized by the same intellectual exaltation, the same cautious reverence, the same fastidious delicacy, the same rhetorical precision, and the same logical sequence which generally characterized the conversations in Simpson's Bar saloon on Sunday evening, when distinguished strangers, representatives of the metropolis or in more civilized localities, and under more favorable auspices, his glasses were broken in the house of a stranger, liquors were uselessly spilled on floor or table in the scarcity of that article.

It was nearly midnight when the festivities were interrupted. "Hush," said Dick Bullen, holding up his hand. It was the querulous voice of Johnny from his adjacent closet: "O dad"

The Old Man arose hurriedly and disappeared in the closet. Presently he reappeared. "His rheumatis is coming on again bad," he explained, "and he wants rubbin." He lifted the demijohn of whisky from the table and shook it. It was empty. Dick Bullen put down his tin cup with an embarrassed laugh. So did the others. The Old Man examined their contents and said hopefully, "I reckon that's enough; he don't need much. You hold on all of you for a spell, and I'll be back;" and vanished in the closet with an old flannel shirt and the whisky. The door closed but imperfectly, and the following dialogue was distinctly audible:

"Now, sonny, wher does she ache worst?"

"Sometimes over yar, and sometimes under yer; but its most powerful from yer to yer. Rub yer, dad."

A silence seemed to indicate a brisk rubbing. Then Johnny:

"Hevin' a good time out yer, dad?"

"Yes, sonny."

"To-morrer's Chrismas—ain't it?"

"Yes, sonny. How does she feel now?"

"Better. Rub a little furder down. Wot's Chrismas, anyway? What's it all about?"

"O, it's a day."

This exhaustive definition was apparently satisfactory, for there was a silent interval of rubbing. Presently Johnny again:

"Mar sez that everywhere else but yer everybody gives things to everybody Chrismas, and thar she jist waded inter you. She sez thar's a man they call Sandy Claws, not a white man, you know, but a kind o' Chinemin, comes down the chimbley night afore Chrismas and gives things to chilliern—boys like me. Put's 'em in their buters. That's what she tried to play upon me. Easy now, pop, wher are you rubbin' to—thet's a mile from the place. She jest made that up, didn't she, jest to aggrevate me and you? Don't rub thar.... Why, dad?"

In the great quiet that seemed to have fallen upon the house the sigh of the near pines and the drip of leaves without was very distinct. Johnny's voice, too, was lowered as he went on. "Don't you take on now, fur I'm gettin' all right fast. Wot's the boys doin' out thar?"

The Old Man partly opened the door and peered through. His guests were sitting there sociably enough, and there were a few silver coins in a lean buckskin purse on the table. "Bettin' on suthin,—some little game or 'nother. They're all right," he replied to Johnny, and recommenced his rubbing.

"I'd like to take a hand and win some money," said Johnny, reflectively, after a pause.

The Old man gibley repeated what was evidently a familiar formula, that if Johnny would wait until he struck it rich in the tunnel he have lots of money, &c., &c.

"Yes," said Johnny, "but you don't. And whether you strike it or I win it, it's about the same. It's all luck. But its mighty cur'o's about Chrismas—ain't it? Why do they call it Chrismas?"

Perhaps from some instinctive deference to the overhearing of his guests, or from some vague sense of incongruity, the Old Man's reply was so low as to be inaudible beyond the room.

"Yes," said Johnny, with some slight abatement of interest, "I've heerd o' him before. Thar, that'll do, dad. I don't ache near so bad as I did. Now wrap me tight in this yer blanket. So. Now," he added in a muffled whisper, "sit down yer by me till I go asleep." To assure himself of obedience, he disengaged one hand from the blanket, and grasping his father's sleeve, again composed himself to rest.

For some moments the Old Man waited patiently. Then the unwonted stillness of the house excited his curiosity, and without moving from the bed, he cautiously opened the door with his disengaged hand, and looked into the main room. To his infinite surprise it was dark and deserted. But even then a smouldering log on the hearth broke, and by the uspringing blaze he saw the figure of Dick Bullen sitting by the dying embers.

"Hello!"

Dick started, rose, and came somewhat unsteadily toward him.

"Whar's the boys?" said the Old Man.

"Gone up the cañon on a little passeer. They're coming back for me in a minit. I'm waitin' round for 'em. What are you starin' at, Old Man," he added with a forced laugh; "do you think I'm drunk?"

The Old Man might have been pardoned the supposition, for Dick's eyes were humid and his face flushed. He loitered and lounged back to the chimney, yawned, shook himself, buttoned up his coat and laughed. "Liquor ain't so plenty as that, Old Man. Now don't you git up," he continued as the Old Man made a movement to release his sleeve from Johnny's hand. "Don't you mind manners. Sit jest whar you be. I'm goin' in a jiffy. Thar, that's them now."

There was a low tap at the door. Dick Bullen opened it quickly, nodded "good night" to his host, and disappeared. The Old Man would have followed him but for the hand that still unconsciously grasped his sleeve. He could have easily disengaged it; it was small, weak and emaciated. But perhaps because it was small, weak and emaciated, he changed his mind, and, drawing his chair closer to the bed, rested his head upon it. In this defenseless attitude the potency of his earlier potations surprised him. The room flickered and faded before his eyes, reappeared, faded again, went out, and left him—asleep.

Meantime Dick Bullen, closing the door, confronted his companions. "Are you ready?" said Staples. "Ready," said Dick; "what's the time?" "Past twelve," was the reply; "can you make it?—it's nigh on fifty miles, the round trip hither and yon." "I reckon," returned Dick, shortly. "What's the mare?" "Bill and Jack's holdin' her at the crossin'." "Let 'em hold on a minit longer," said Dick.

He turned and re-entered the house softly. By the light of the guttering candle and dying fire he saw that the door of the little room was open. He stepped toward it on tiptoe and looked in. The Old Man had fallen back in his chair, snoring, his helpless feet thrust out in a line with his collapsed shoulders, and his hat pulled over his eyes. Beside him, on a narrow wooden bedstead, lay Johnny, muffled tightly in a blanket that had all save a strip of forehead and a few curls damp with perspiration. Dick Bullen made a step forward, hesitated, and glanced over his shoulder into the deserted room. Everything was quiet. With a sudden resolution he parted his huge mustaches with both hands and stooped over the sleeping boy. But even as he did so a mischievous blast, lying in wait, swooped down the chimney, rekindling the hearth, and lit up the room with a shameless glow from which Dick fled in beshful terror.

His companions were already waiting for him at the crossing. Two of them were struggling in the darkness with some strange misshapen bulk, which, as Dick came nearer, took the semblance of a great yellow horse.

It was the mare. She was not a pretty picture. From her Roman nose to her rising haunches, from her arched spine hidden by the stiff mochillas of a Mexican saddle, to her thick, straight, bony legs, there was not a line of equine grace. In her half-blind but wholly vicious white eyes, in her protruding under lip, in her monstrous color, there was nothing but ugliness and vice.

"Now then," said Staples, "stand clar of her heels, boys, and up with you. Don's miss your first foot of her mane, and mind ye get your off stirrup quick. Ready?"

There was a leap, a scrambling struggle, a bound, a wild retreat of the crowd, a circle of flying hoofs, two springless heaps that jarred the earth, a rapid play and jingle of spurs, a plunge, and then the voice of Dick somewhere in the darkness—"All right!"

"Don't take the lower road back unless you're hard pushed for time! Don't hold her in down hill! We'll be at the ford at five. (Clang! Hoops! Mules! Go!"

A splash, a spark struck from the ledge in the road, a slatter in the rocky cut beyond, and Dick was gone.

Sing, O Muse, the ride of Richard Bullen! Sing, O Muse of chivalrous men! the sacred quest, the doughty deeds, the battery of low churls, the fearsome ride and grewsome perils of the Flower of Simpson's Bar! Alack! she is dumb, this Muse! She will have none of this hacking brute and swaggering, ragged rider, and I must fain follow him, in prose, afoot.

It was one o'clock, and yet he had only gained Rattlesnake Hill. For in that time Jovita had relieved him all her impedimenta and practiced her vicious tactics in the saddle. Twice she had thrown up her head and plunged until the startled rider thought the tightening girth would burst beneath him, and twice she had fallen backward, and twice had the agile Dick, unharmed, regained his seat better to withstand her vicious tags again. And a mile beyond them, at the foot of a long hill, was Rattlesnake Creek. Dick knew that here was the crucial test of his ability to perform his enterprise, yet his heart grinned, but his knees well into her flanks, and changed his defensive tactics to brisk aggression. Bullied and maddened, Jovita began the descent of the hill. Here the skill of Richard performed its third feat with ostentacious objurgation and well-feigned cries of alarm. It is unnecessary to add that Jovita instantly ran away. Nor need I state the fame made in the descent; it is written in the chronicles of Simpson's Bar. Enough that in another moment, as it seemed to Dick, she was splashing on the overflowed banks of Rattlesnake Creek. Dick expected, the momentum she had acquired carried her beyond the point of balking, and holding her well together for a mighty leap, they dashed into the middle of the swiftly-flowing current. A few moments of kicking, wading and swimming, and Dick drew a long breath on the opposite bank.

The road from Rattlesnake Creek to Red Mountain was tolerably level. Either the plunge in Rattlesnake Creek had dampened her baleful fire, or the act which led to it had shown her the superior wickedness of her rider, for Jovita no longer wasted her surplus energy in wanton conceits. Once she bucked, but it was from force of habit; once she shied, but it was from a new freshly-painted meeting-house at the crossing of the county road. Hollows, ditches, gravelly deposits, patches of freshly-springing grasses flew from beneath her rattling hoofs. She began to smell unpleasantly, once or twice she coughed slightly, but there was no abatement of her strength or speed. By two o'clock he had passed Red Mountain, and begun the descent to the plain. Ten minutes later the driver of the fast Pioneer coach was overtaken and passed by a "man on a Pinto hoss"—an event sufficiently notable for remark. At half-past two Dick rose in his stirrups with a great shout. Stars were glittering through the rifted clouds, and beyond him, out of the plain, rose two spires, a flag-staff and a straggling line of black objects. Dick jingled his spurs and swung his reins, Jovita bounded forward, and in another moment they swept into Tuttleville, and drew up before the wooden piazza of "The Hotel of All Nations."

What transpired that night at Tuttleville is not strictly a part of this record. Briefly I may state, however, that after Jovita had been handed over to a sleepy ostler, whom she at once kicked into unpleasant consciousness, Dick sallied out with the barkeeper for a tour of the sleeping town. Lights still gleamed from a few saloons and gambling-houses; but, avoiding these, they stopped before several closed shops, and by persistent tapping and judicious outcry roused the proprietors from their beds, and made them unbar the doors of their magazines and expose their wares. Sometimes they were met by curses, but oftener by interest and some concern in their needs, and the interview was invariably concluded by a drink. It was three o'clock before this pleasantry was given over, and with a small water-proof bag of india-rubber strapped on his shoulders Dick returned to the hotel. But here he was waylaid by Beauty—Beauty opulent in charms, affluent in dress, persuasive in speech, and Spanish in accent! In vain she repeated the invitation in "Excelsior;" happily scorned by all Alpine-climbing youth, and rejected by this child of the Sierras—a rejection softened in this instance by a laugh and his last gold coin. And then he sprang to the saddle and dashed down the lonely street and out into the lonelier plain, where presently the lights, the black line of houses, the spires and the flag-staff sank into the earth behind him again and were lost in the distance.

The storm had cleared away, the air was brisk and cold, the outlines of adjacent landmarks were distinct, but it was half-past four before Dick reached the meeting-house and the crossing of the county road. To avoid the rising grade he had taken a longer and more circuitous road, in whose viscid mud Jovita sank fetlock deep at every bound. It was a poor preparation for a steady ascent of five miles more; but Jovita, gathering her legs under her, took it with her usual blind, unreasoning fury, and a half-hour later reached the long level that led to Rattlesnake Creek. Another half-hour would bring him to the creek. He threw the reins lightly upon the neck of the mare, shrivaed to her, and began to sing.

Suddenly Jovita shied with a bound that would have unseated a less practiced rider. Hanging to her rein was a figure that had leaped from the bank, and at the same time from the road before her arose a shadowy horse and rider. "Throw up your hands," commanded this second apparition, with an oath.

Dick felt the mare tremble, quiver, and apparently sink under him. He knew what it meant and was prepared.

"Stand aside, Jack Simpson. I know you, you d—d thief. Let me pass or —"

He did not finish the sentence. Jovita rose straight in the air with a terrific bound, throwing the figure from her bit with a single shake of her vicious head, and charged her deadly malevolence down on the impediment before her. An oath, a pistol-shot, horse and highwayman rolled over in the road, and the next moment Jovita was a hundred yards away. But the good right arm of her rider, shattered by a bullet, dropped helplessly at his side.

Without slackening his speed he shifted the reins to his left hand. But a few moments later he was obliged to halt and tighten the saddle-girths that had slipped in the onset. This in his crippled condition took some time. He had no fear of pursuit, but looking up he saw that the eastern stars were already paling, and that the distant peaks had lost their ghostly whiteness, and now stood out blackly against a lighter sky. Day was upon him. Then completely absorbed in a single idea, he forgot the pain of his wound, and mounting again dashed on toward Rattlesnake Creek. But now Jovita's breath came broken by gasps, Dick reeled in his saddle, and brighter and brighter grew the sky.

Ride, Richard; run, Jovita; linger, O day!

For the last few rods there was a roaring in his ears. Was it exhaustion from loss of blood, or what? He was dazed and addy as he swept down the hill, and did not recognize his surroundings. Had he taken the wrong road, or was this Rattlesnake Creek?

It was. But the brawling creek he had swam a few hours before and risen, more than doubled its volume, and now rolled a swift and resistless river between him and Rattlesnake Hill. For the first time that night Richard's heart sank within him. The river, the mountain, the quickening east swam before his eyes. He shut them to recover his self-control. In that brief interval, by some fantastic mental process, the little room at Simpson's Bar, and the figures of the sleeping father and son, rose upon him. He opened his eyes wildly, cast off his coat, pistol, boots and saddle, bound his precious pact tightly to his shoulders, grasped the bare flanks of Jovita with his bared knees, and, with a shout, dashed into the yellow water. A cry rose from the opposite bank as the head of a man and horse struggled for a few moments against the battling current, and then were swept away, amid uprooted trees and whirling drift-wood.

* * * * * * *

The Old Man started and woke. The fire on the hearth was dead, the candle in the outer room flickering in its socket, and somebody was rapping at the door. He opened it, but fell back with a cry before the dripping, half-naked figure that reeled against the doorpost.

"Dick?"

"Hush! Is he awake yet?"

"No,—but Dick?—"

"Dry up, you old fool! Get me some whisky quick!" The Old Man flew and returned with the empty bottle! Dick would go no farther than the threshold. He staggered, caught at the handle of the door, and motioned to the Old Man.

"Thar's suthin' in my pack yer for Johnny. Take it off. I can't."

The Old Man unstrapped the pack and laid it before the exhausted man.

"Open it, quick!"

He did so with trembling fingers. It contained only a few poor toys—cheap and barbaric enough, goodness knows, but bright with paint and tinsel. One of them was broken; another, I fear, was irretrievably ruined by water; and as the shamed eyes fell upon it, there was a cruel cut.

"It don't look like much, that's a fact," said Dick meekly.... "But it's the best we could do.... Take 'em, Old Man, and put 'em in his stocking and tell him—tell him, you know—how—my—Old Man"—The old man heard a sob sinking through the room. "Dick, boy, wake up a little! Dick!" But it was too late. The Santa Claus had come.

And even so, bedraggled, ragged, unshaven, and unshorn, with one arm hanging helplessly at his side, Santa Claus came to Simpson's Bar and fell fainting on the first threshhold. The Christmas dawn came slowly after, touching the remoter peaks with the rosy warmth of ineffable love. And it looked so tenderly on Simpson's Bar that the whole mountain, as if caught in a generous action, blushed to the skies.—Bret Harte, in the Atlantic Monthly.

AMOUR GLASS.—The elements which enter into the composition of the subject of glass are silex or flint, soda, potash, lime, clay or its metallic basis, and minium or red lead, the matter which colors house-painters' priming. They are mixed together in the crucible of the glass-house, and then combined or melted by the aid of fire. The temperature (in all cases high) at which fusion is attained, varies with the kind of glass and the ingredients of which it is composed. Window-glass is made of flint, soda and lime; bottle-glass, of flint and iron (in the shape of ferruginous sand), soda, lime and clay; crown-glass, of flint, potash and lime; and so on for other kinds of glass. The greater the number of bases used in the composition, the more easily they are melted into glass. Hence, for chemical glassware, such as bottles, jars, the manufacturer mixes as many different elements as possible, in order to obtain his result at the least possible expenditure of fuel. Nevertheless, as often happens, what is gained in one way is lost in another; for the greater the fusibility of the glass, the more it is liable to decomposition by atmospheric and other influences.

This decomposition is evidenced by curious and even beautiful phenomena. Old window-glass, and especially stable window-glass, manifests incipient decay by the iridescent tints which cover its surface. Bottles that have long been buried in the earth or submerged in ponds become most striking and ornamental specimens, from the gorgeous hues which they display; their transparence is gone, and they are coated with small scales shining with metallic lustre. By exposure to great heat and gradual cooling, glass also becomes unvitrified and opaque, presenting a great resemblance to crockery, and named, after its discoverer, Réaumur's porcelain. The opacity results from the formation of microscopic crystals of one of the earthy silicates which constitute glass, in consequence of the volatilization of the alkaline ingredient. Such porcelain is in request for decorative purposes; nor is this the only way in which the decomposition of the original compound has been turned to account.

Soluble glass is obtained by melting in a crucible a mixture of fifteen parts of quartz reduced to a fine powder, ten parts of carbonate of potash, and one part of pulverized charcoal. For use, it is broken up into little bits, and then dissolved in boiling water till the solution has the consistency of syrup. It is somewhat muddy and has an alkaline taste. Nevertheless, it must be very pure not to effloresce under the action of the air after a certain lapse of time. A good plan is to cover the articles to be protected with several coats of this soluble glass, beginning with a weak solution, the following being more concentrated liquid. Its efficacy is also increased by mixing with it some other incombustible substance, powdered clay for instance.—All the Year Round.

TITIAN'S BIRTHPLACE.—At Pieve di Cadore "Il divino TEZIANO" was born in 1477; at Pieve di Cadore he lived till he was ten years old; to Pieve di Cadore he returned year after year, for love of his kindred, men and mountains. There, after the death of his wife, in 1530, he took refuge with his three motherless little children; and during this visit he painted, on a banner for the village church, a picture of three little children giving flowers to a Madonna seated on a throne.

There, in 1560, he came again, old, but not bent, and bearing the titles of Count of the Empire and Knight of the Golden Spur.

There also he would have fled, in 1576, when the plague was sweeping Venice; but brave and strong to the last, he delayed going until an edict had been issued forbidding the departure of any citizen from Venice. So in Venice he died, ninety-nine years old, alone, forsaken even by his servants; and the pestilence which had taken his life thwarted his purpose even after his death, for none dared carry his body—as he had willed, and left order for its burial—to Pieve di Cadore.

They buried it in haste in the church of the Frari in Venice, dropping into the grave the knightly insignia which the Emperor had given to the painter; and for nearly half a century no stone marked the spot where the insignia lay turning to dust, and the dust lay turning into insignia of those mysterious things "which shall be."

The house where he was born was a poor little cottage, low and black and smoky; an old woman, who looked as if she might be a hundred or a thousand years old, was hobbling and mumbling about in the kitchen, over just such a stone platform of cooking-stove as we had left in the inn. She was used to receiving visitors in the name of TITIAN, and had a glib string of improbable story at her tongue's end. The huge rafters overhead were burned and smoked into blacks and yellows and browns, which were stronger witness to centuries than any words could give; and an old stone fountain in front of the house, presided over by a nameless, featureless stone saint, plashed away into an eight-sided stone basin; a very dirty little boy was sailing a chip in it; probably he looked not unlike another little boy who sailed chips in it 400 years ago, and whose name now gives honor to the cottage walls in this inscription: "Within these humble walls TEZIANO VECELLI began his celebrated life."—*From Bits of Travel by H. ANECDOTES OF PHILIP ASTLEY.—It has been said that ASTLEY was uneducated, and it may be added that he was a man of somewhat violent temper. His energetic nature was wont to find expression in very intemperate language. But time cut of mind fierce words and commiatory expletives have been considered indispensable to the due carrying on of the business of the stage. He was a very despot in his theatre. He had the reputation of applying his whip indiscriminately to his biped and quadruped players. Perhaps it was only to the last named he referred, however, when he said to Mr. HARRIS, the manager of Covent Garden, who had complained of the insubordination of his company, "Why don't you serve your performers as I do mine? Never let 'em have anything to eat till they've done acting." When told by his master-carpenter that it would be impossible to produce a new piece by the time he had fixed for its performance, he demanded angrily, "Who's Mr. Impossible, Sir? I don't know him. I never heard of him. He don't live in this house, Sir! and he never shall! Go to your work!" He was obeyed, and the piece was duly forthcoming at the stated date. "Do you think you are dealing with your horses?" JOHN KEMBLE asked him once, with superb scorn, when a dispute had arisen in regard to the rent to be paid for the Liverpool Theatre, the property of the tragedian, which ASTLEY had hired for a season. "D—n you, Sir!" cried ASTLEY, hotly, "and do you think you are going to play Richard III. over me?"—All the Year Round.

NEW VIEWS ABOUT SUN-SPOTS.—Mr. PROCTOR, in a communication to the Astronomical Society, shows reason for believing that the spots on the sun are an effect of volcanoes, roused, as it appears, into activity by the relative proximity of the planets. This view is supported by the fact, that earthquakes and volcanic eruptions occur most frequently on our globe when the moon is nearest to us. Even the small changes produced by tidal action were supposed by the late Sir JOHN HERSCHEL, to have an exciting effect on volcanoes in the neighborhood of the coast. "And if," says Mr. PROCTOR, "the mightiest of the planets sympathizes with solar action—if, when the sun is most disturbed, the belts of Jupiter are also subject (as of late and in 1860) to strange phenomena of change—how readily do we find an explanation of what would otherwise seem so mysterious, when we remember that as Jupiter disturbs the mighty mass of the sun, so the sun would reciprocally disturb the mass of the largest of his attendant orbs." The Astronomer-royal for Scotland, in his last annual address to the Board of Visitors of the Edinburgh Observatory, presents another aspect of the solar question. He states that he finds a correspondence between the sun-spot period and the curve of temperature, as shown by the underground thermometers under his charge. It seems likely that meteorologists will have in future to bestow more attention on the sun than hitherto, for astronomical observers in other places are discovering coincidences in other phenomena as well as in temperature. The observer at Toronto believes that he has made out a connection between the annual rainfall at that place and the sun-spots; and at Oxford, eight years' observation of the direction of the wind shows that it has a regular amount of range between the maximum and the minimum of visible sun-spots. From this we may infer that local meteorological observations will henceforth be discussed with reference to the grand periodical phenomena of the sun.—Chambers's Journal.

THE AMPEZZO PASS.—A strange hopelessness almost holds me back from the attempt to speak of that day's journey through the Ampezzo Pass. They who have not seen it will not believe; they who have seen it will smile that one should try to put such shapes into words. Possibly geologists can tell what a dolomite mountain is; how and why it is so scarped, so jagged, so wrought into castle and battlement and obelisk and cathedral-front; beautiful and terrible and graceful and grotesque; by mass, all at once; in sunlight, in shadow, at noon, at night; shifting and changing tint with every breath of wind or cloud on its surface; but to common men's eyes, these dolomite ranges are as unlike all other mountain forms as is Cellini's carven work to market-place pottery.

They seem like supernatural architecture gleaming out of supernatural realms in upper air. There are spires and minarets and bell-towers and turrets and colonnades and wrought walls; that they are ten, twelve, thirteen thousand feet away, that no human foot can scale them, no living earthly thing abide among them, only makes their distinct semblance of palace and church and city the more uncanny. And when, as often happens, a sudden wreath of cloud or fantastic growth of moss changes some scarred and lined rock into plain likeness of human face, it becomes still harder not to believe that they are tenanted by beings not of flesh and blood. One such face we saw, which never took its eyes off us for miles. Then sharp turns in the road made no change in it, except to draw the gray hood of air closer round its cheeks, and to make it look more and more weird.

These startling and fantastic mountain shapes hedged us, walled us, seemed to marshal themselves to oppose us, all the way from Longarone to Tai Codore. In spite of ourselves we were overawed. If the sun had not shone gayly and the peas

Everybody's curiosity being satisfied, everybody save the newly-married pair and a few black domestics, are wished a "mass buenas noches," or, more correctly speaking, for the hour is four A. M., "a very good-morning."—All the Year Round.

THE PRINCIPAL STREET OF SIMLA.—A long, narrow, winding road, between wooden houses, stained dull red, and two stories in height, runs up a slight incline on a sharp hill-crest, dividing two valleys. The lower story of every house has neither doors nor windows in front, but is a little cave merely, serving at once as warehouse and workshop. Passing through this busy little street, you see, in turn, every trade and occupation being carried on. There is a shop full of tailors, with high turbans on, busily at work; one of them is reading in a sing-song voice to the others some ancient tale of Musulman prowess, or of the miraculous deeds of the Prophet. In the little adjoining cell or shop, as we may call it, by contrary, is an old gray-bearded man, brooding over a little earthen stove, and blowing into flame a few lumps of charcoal, through a little brass tube, with all his might. Opposite to him is sitting another old fellow, who is picking and catching at something in the fire with a pair of tiny tongs. One or two large gold nose-rings are lying near on a little tray, beside a silver bangle or two, indicating the manufactory and depot of a goldsmith. After every few minutes of exertion, the two old gentlemen cease from their labors, to take a whiff from the tall hookahs standing near, and to exchange a friendly word with the carpenter who works in the little hole on the opposite side of the street. At present, this artisan is bending over a piece of wood he holds between his toes, and into which he is drilling an eyelet with an instrument that looks like a child's bow. Near him, his son, also sitting on his haunches, on the floor, and holding between his toes a half-made comb, is vigorously working with a tool, suggesting the idea of some horrible instrument of torture, but really acting in the capacity of a saw. Strewed about the floor are a plank or two; some unfinished pieces of work; a couple of long pipes; a small, naked, crawling child; and a piece of sugar-cane.

From a neighboring shop, sounds of animated conversation strike upon the ear. A grain-merchant surrounded by little bags of corn and boxes of flour, is sitting in a remote corner of his shop, wrapped up closely in a dirty white cloth, and without moving his hands, is raising his head to suck the fragrant hookah. Half-a dozen of his clients are attempting to bargain with him, and sitting in a row on their hams in front, all are talking at once. Proudly conscious of his monopoly, he does not trouble himself to bandy idle words, but, with all the patience of the Oriental, calmly waits till they have made up their minds to pay his price for whatever they want. In the opposite corner, an enormously obese old man is stretched out at full length, sound asleep. This is the shopkeeper's venerable parent, who has retired from active life, and pensioned himself on his son. But we must peep into a tiny little place about the size of a rabbit-hutch, next door to the grain-merchant's shop. An aged gentleman, with huge brass-rimmed spectacles, is fingering delicately with a wire forceps some hard, gray, little particles collected in an iron dish. Presently, he picks out one, and applies it to a very small grindstone, the handle of which he turns with his great toe. This is a jeweler, as you can see by the little papers of green and yellow stones exposed on a board, lying beside him; and he is putting faces on rough garnets which have been brought to him by some of the neighboring villagers. His grandson, a fat little urchin, in Summer costume—a yard of string—is sitting gravely in front of him, reading out of a very ancient-looking book in Hindi character. It is the whole library of the family, and the old man has known it well since the day he first read it to his grandpapa in the same ancestral little shop. But still he appears to be interested, and every now and then pauses in his work to exclaim, "Wah! wah!" as an incident of peculiar interest is arrived at. To the Eastern mind novelty has no charms; and a book with which the reader is familiar is regarded as an old tried friend, who will not disappoint by any unanticipated dullness, or disturb the mind by a more lofty-looked-for brilliancy.

We must visit one more shop in the bazaar—the largest and one of the most important—the sweetmeat shop. We had better not enter, though, as the floor is honey-combed with numerous little clay ovens, and there would be no little danger of being precipitated into a caldron of liquid toffy. Four—dreadfully uncloaked—men, carefully oiled, to protect their skin against the great heat, are moving about with long iron spoons, stirring here and mixing there, or kneading into little fids various compounds of coarse sugar and rancid butter. The outcome of their labors is exposed to view on a broad board. Candies, cakes and toffies of every shape, but all of the same light-brown color, buried in flies and wasps, both dead and alive, are heaped up in brass dishes or little wooden platforms. A stray child, the color of the confections, has got mixed up with them, and is languidly sucking a column of "lump of delight" nearly as big as its leg. Less fortunate youngsters are seen hovering about, regaling themselves with the savory smells which issue forth. Now and then some big hill-man purchases for a few little shells a block off one of the dishes, and straightway goes out into the road, seats himself on his heels, and devours it, to the great entertainment of a swarm of naked little urchins and a pariah dog or two.

All over India, sweetmeats are consumed as a substantial article of food. A native when traveling seldom eats anything else, and between the two great meals, at all times, he whiles away the long noon of the Indian Summer day by sucking lollipops or candy between the whiffs of his hookah. Large dishes of sweetmeats are very common presents to make on religious festivals or domestic red-letter days, and when a Hindu wants to be very merry or very dissipated, he never gets drunk, as a Scotchman does, but goes to a "mithai" shop, and makes himself ill with candied sugar. Now that we have shopped a little in the bazaar, let us take a stroll through it. It is thronged with natives, from the scarlet and golden messenger of the British Government, to our old friends, the wild dirty Tibetan. Sauntering in a bazaar is the summum bonum of life to a Hindu. Standing chatting in the middle of the roadway, or smoking a pipe with some friends in a shop, or sitting on the edge of the gutter, quietly contemplating the passers-by, he is perfectly happy. Within twenty yards is one of the grandest scenes in the world—a splendid panorama of hill and valley, with the eternal snows as a background on one side, while on the other the view melts away into the distant plains across which the great Sutlej is seen like a silver band. But to our brown friends such things possess no attraction. The bustle, the closeness, the smells, the flies, the pariah dogs, the unowned children of the kennel, and all the other attractions of the bazaar, are to them more pleasing than the majestic tranquility of mountain, and valley, and far-off plain.—Chambers's Journal.

RELICS OF MOZART.—But all our weary indifference vanished the moment we crossed the threshold of the chamber in which Salzburg keeps the relics of her MOZART. On the walls were portraits of MOZART at different ages, beginning with him at six years old, in the court dress which he wore when he played before MARIA THERESA. In this he is a round-cheeked, stupid, obstinate-looking little boy, just such as play in the dirt in every road in Germany today.

A large and not very good oil-painting shows him as a young man playing a duet with his sister, to the severe critic their father, who sits by listening with his violin resting on his arm. Above them hangs the picture of their mother, a portrait within a portrait, far the most striking face in the group. If the portraits be good, it is easy to see that however much mechanical facility MOZART may have inherited from his father, the Chapel-Master, his fine quality of genius came from his mother.

CONSTANCE WEBER, with her hair in indescribable scant, hangs between MOZART'S mother and sister. If she habitually wore her hair in that fashion, MOZART'S marriage is inexplicable. Further on she appears again, subdued into the neatest of old ladies, with light curls and a clean cap, the Frau NISSEN. Her "3d Mann," as the good little Irishman wrote it down for us, was one NISSEN, a Danish consul, and a very commonplace-looking Nissen he was, if the lazy judge from his picture, which looked strangely out of place in the room devoted to relics of MOZART.

In the middle of the room stood MOZART'S piano, a small one of only five octaves, but clearly showing the great musical boy. Tinkle, tinkle went the keys under the little man's red puffy fingers. We did not drive our kin to let it almost be with such note that he struck, it became harder than ever to fancy MOZART'S ever having been easier heard. Nearer to us than Stadler had said, discreetly thinking of pianos, if this be a specimen of the best their day afforded. What would he, and MOZART say, to an Erard or Chickering of 1869? Against the wall stood a still more old-fashioned thing with still more pathetic tinkle to its keys, a little old spinet, on which, if we understood correctly, MOZART composed his Requiem. This, too, we wished to see looked forever; how much more touching memorial of a great musician would be his instrument forever locked, never to be played on by mortal hand, than set wide open in a museum to be thumbed by masters and pilgrims in the same mood in which they would carve their names on the legs, if it were permitted.

My letter will be too long, if I tell in detail of all the interesting relics in this room; manuscript music, composed and written by MOZART at the age of eight; old exercise books from which he had practiced; four large volumes of manuscript letters; one short note which can be bought for the small sum of two hundred francs; an old frayed and faded satin letter-case, which was embroidered for him by one of his wife's sisters, and which he always carried in his pocket; a seal and a ring which he always wore; these were tossing about loose in a common box, and with them a garnet cross which had belonged to his sister.—*From Bits of Travel by H. TWO CELEBRATED HORSES.—PHILIP ASTLEY was undoubtedly the best horse-tamer of his time, and as a judge of what may be called "trick horse-flesh," he has perhaps never been equaled. He generally obtained his stud from Smithfield, caring, as he said, "little for shape, make or color; temper was the only consideration." He rarely gave more than five pounds for each. For this price he had obtained his accomplished horse Billy, a great popular favorite, playful as a kitten with those he knew, and deeply versed in all the learning of the circus. Billy could fire off pistols, take a tea-kettle off a blazing fire, lay the cloth, arrange cups and saucers, and invite the clown to tea. All agreed that he could do everything but talk. But one day Billy was arrested by the Sheriff, not on account of any extravagance of his own, but owing to the misconduct of a groom, one SAUNDERS, to whom he had been lent. SAUNDERS had been many years in ASTLEY'S employ, and had borrowed Billy to exhibit him by way of private speculation. This terminated in the imprisonment of SAUNDERS in the Fleet, and the sale of Billy to the highest bidder. For three years the favorite was lost sight of. Accidentally two of ASTLEY'S "riders" discovered Billy drawing a cart in Whitechapel. There could be no question of the fact, for upon hearing a peculiar clicking together of the nails of the forefinger and thumb—one of the signs or sounds ASTLEY had always employed in training his steed—Billy had pricked up his ears, pranced and danced in a very remarkable manner. The recognition was mutual. Billy's present proprietor was well content to part with him at a very moderate price, "for," as he explained, "though he's the best-tempered creature breathing, yet sometimes he does out such very ruin capers that we calls him the mountebank." Forthwith Billy was restored to his friends; all was forgiven, and he reappeared in the circus as though he had never been absent from it, made to leap through all his "business," and so continued to do for many years, dying at last of sheer old age, universally respected and regretted.

But a steed even more famous than Billy was ASTLEY'S charger, the Spanish horse given him by Gen. ELLIOTT after the German war. The Spanish horse could perform all Billy's tricks and more; could ungirth his own saddle, wash his own feet in a pail of water, and, as some allege, even curry-comb himself. The Spanish horse is reputed to have lived to the mature age of forty-two. When his teeth failed him, he subsisted upon a daily allowance of two half-quartern loaves. Even after death he served the theatre of which he had long been a main ornament and support. His hide was stretched and made into a thunder-drum, "which," writes an intimate friend of the deceased, "was placed on the prompt side of the orchestra, and when its rumbling sounds died on the ears of those who knew the circumstances, it served to their recollection as a parting knell." The thunder-drum probably went the way of many theatrical properties. It must have perished in 1841—if it survived so long—when for a third time ASTLEY'S amphitheatre was totally consumed by fire.—All the Year Round.

DEATHS FROM WILD BEASTS AND SNAKES IN INDIA.—India is not quite such a pleasant place to live in, after all, if we may judge from the statistics recently issued by the Calcutta Government of deaths, during the three years ending 1869, from wild beasts and snakes in India. Bengal leads off with 14,787 deaths from snake-bites, and 4,741 from wild beasts. Madras counts 760 from snake-bites, and 638 from wild beasts. North-west Provinces, 2,474 and 2,168 respectively. Central Provinces, 1,901 and 1,247. Bombay is in the moderate, the return being 568 deaths from snakes, and 148 from wild beasts; while British Burmah seems the safest place of all, there only having been 22 deaths from snake-bites—but here we think there must be a mistake—and 101 from wild beasts.—Once a Week.

EXTORTIONATE FREIGHTS.

Shameful Exactions by the Railroad Monopolies—Complaints of the Merchants—Proposed Legislative Action.

For several years past during the Winter season the country merchants, particularly from the western part of the State, have complained of the almost insufferable tariff imposed upon their goods by the railroad monopolies. It has been the custom of the railway companies for a long time, as soon as water competition had ceased by the final closing of the rivers and canals by ice, to advance all freights at least one hundred per cent. The many complaints of the New-York merchants, especially the large dry-goods jobbers and grocers, led to-day to introduce a bill to the Legislature providing that the railroads of the State shall not charge in Winter for the transportation of freight an increase of more than twenty-five per cent above what they charge in Summer, and that the gross charges on freight for short distances shall not be greater than the same charges for long distances; meaning that it shall not cost more proportionately to get merchandise transported from New-York to Albany than from New-York to Buffalo. A representative of the TIMES yesterday called upon a number of the largest dry-goods and grocery merchants in the City, and all denounced in the most marked manner the course of the railroad companies. They said that the rate in leading articles, such as sugar, molasses, staple dry goods, &c., was being gradually taken away from them in consequence of the exorbitant Winter freights. Said one: "A country store-keeper, living for instance at Dansville, Livingston County, fifty miles from Rochester, can now buy goods from a Rochester jobber, who purchases in Boston, for cheaper than he can in New-York. Formerly there was at least a difference of ten cents a hundred on the freight, and I would gladly take that amount as my profit on the goods, and would do a good business all the yearground." The head of the extensive dry goods establishment of H. B. CLAFLIN & Co. informed the reporter that he was delighted to see that there was a prospect of some legislative action being taken, and did not think that twenty-five per cent was "above the mark." Mr. CLAFLIN, in concluding his remarks, said: "You see, Sir, the great and radical trouble is that not only the Boston and Albany road but all the New-England roads are managered by the merchants themselves, and not by stock-jobbers, as is the case in New-York. Here the stock speculator thinks the freights will come to him anyhow, and does nothing, and cares less about promoting country trade by low freights." Wherever the same object went, the same story was told, and an earnest desire was expressed by all that the Legislature would make some law to protect their interests.

THE ARMS TRADE.

Its Enormous Extent—Who Wants Arms—Their Price—Where They go to—Our Interest.

It must be mentioned with regret, that while giving due consideration to these more terrible and apparently spasmodic rages which from epidemic to the human race, a very large proportion of mankind are always getting themselves into a chronic state of hot water. To use this term in its milder sense means something decidedly more within reach of the Rifle or pistol—the instant excitement and a boiling pot. This sudden elevation of temperature can only be kept up at its maximum by means of cannon, muskets and pistols, by bayonets and sabres, with the necessary adjuncts of charge-canister, powder and ball, shell and fuse. Soudan bites her thumb at Darfur, away off in Negro land, or Venezuela quarrels with Colombia, adhere to our shirt, or Chili refuses to honor her Francesca on Zanzibar her head man—(all these discussions arising from causes perfectly indifferent to the rest of mankind,) immediately an appeal is made to arms, and all necessary preparations are pushed for killing people in the most summary way. Such is the constant want of weapons all over the world, that should a merchant, without much respect for international law, load up a good sized vessel with arms and ammunition of approved kinds, and set out with the intention of disposing of them wherever he could find a market, it would not be impossible for him to sell his cargo three or four times over in a six months' voyage.

If one could only get inside of some of these large establishments in New-York or London, where you can be furnished with anything you want for human destruction, from a pocket pistol to a columbiad, where the accomplished managing head could inform you to a fraction, in all the nicety of detail, what was requisite for the defense of a barricade, or the contest in the street, up to the armament necessary for a whole army corps during a six months' campaign, what a number of State secrets one might learn. Monaco to all intents and purposes is at peace with all the world. Suddenly comes a stranger into the arm market. He buys a Derringer and pays for it. Next day a revolver tempts his fancy. The day after he purchases a score of them, and orders them by express, C. O. D., for Monaco. Before the week is over a thousand Remingtons, or Enfields, or Sharps, or Gallaghers, of the most approved pattern, with a million or so of cartridges, follow. Two or three weeks elapse, when suddenly, like a storm in the Summer skies, bursts forth to the world the horrid news that either barricades, defended with armed men have sprung up like enchantment in the streets of Monaco, and that the Prince is fighting for his life, or that that mighty potentate has formed a junction with the Pope, to fight over again the Schleswig-Holstein question. All the world, even the astute BISMARCK, is astonished, and several diplomatists hang themselves from chagrin at not having been fully posted. Yet two or three very quiet men, either in London or New-York, have been for some time perfectly aware that some trouble was brewing there, and have been expecting news of a bellicose character from this quarter for the last month. Of course it was none of their business to inquire what the arms were to be used for. Regarded as simple articles of merchandise, put on a precise footing with soap or sugar, somebody want ed them, paid the price asked for them, and that was the end of it. Of course they knew a row of some kind was hatching there, but that was somebody else's lookout.

The business of buying and selling arms, though an important one before the civil war, during the rebellion reached to an enormous extent. Since that period, with occasional lulls, it has been a very constant one. Save England and Prussia, there is not a single country in Europe, Africa, Asia or South America that has not been a large purchaser of arms from the United States. South America and Mexico seem to be wanting something to blow their heads off with, or to rip out their vitals with all the year round. They may be described with Cuba as being always in the market. Lead in musket-balls is never heavy in these marts, and lines of guns are always going off. An insatiate desire for every kind of weapon of destruction seems to influence them. In Mexico revolutions and counter-revolutions can be counted upon with the same certainty by the trade, as grocers are sure of disposing of their extra stocks of plums and citron about Christmas time. Minor South American States are always making pronunciamentos, and all such fine-sounding terms have for interpreters gun-shots and sabre-slashes.

Models under late years in breech-loading pieces did for a while unsettle the market, yet there is demand for muzzle-loaders. Even the old-fashioned "Brown Bess," with the gaping muzzle and gun-flint arrangement, at present considered as a pre-Adamite weapon, has its admirers. In fact there is a good demand for them. Did you hunt the market through you could not find 3,000 of them. East and west coast of Africa want this kind of gun, and when they can be found, they may be shipped to our African brothers with a goodly chance of profit. Some time ago, a paragraph ran through the Associated Press, in regard to a large quantity of very fair muskets bought at a very low figure, and shipped to China and Japan. They found no sale there, the Chinese and Japanese declaiming anything save their own bronze. The large houses, selling arms of all kinds and qualities, are strange to say, seeing as it does, the position of being neutral ground. During the Crimean war, Russian and English ordnance officers met very frequently in the same establishment, each one busy as to the interests of his Government, only each one with his own idea of getting the arms in the quickest possible period, knowing, of course, all the time, that they might be buying the exact weapon, which might be the means of exterminating each other. To-day Spaniard and Cuban buy side by side, exchange a sleekly glance, may even covertly inquire about each other's health, each one hoping internally to see the other garroted.

The business is one requiring enormous capital, and no end of acuteness. Credits are out of the question. If war is a pleasant amusement, it must be settled for, as far as powder and guns go, on the spot. "No money, Sackatoon," sends, and very properly, to be a rule with the trade. Timbuctoo may have it all its own way today, and may have paid a million for its guns, and Sackatoo may be at its last gasp. The former might ask a credit for just a thousand dollars more. But war at all times is a risky business, and before a week is over the Sackatoons may be routing the Timbuctoans, foot, horse and dragoons, and your money risked in Timbuctoo will be good for nothing.

The enormous character of the business can hardly be appreciated at a single glance. It is perfectly impossible to say what amount may want after a single engagement. A defeat costs millions on millions of dollars, and a victory but little less. A house in this business may be called on at a moment's warning, not only for guns, but for clothes and shoes, for batteries and harness, and must be prepared to add even substance to the catalogue of wants. Rapidity of execution is everything. It may be worth while to pay, in order to get 5,000 guns at a certain place at a given time, a million of dollars, when a delivery a week later would be worse than useless. The scope of mind, the power of combination, the precision as to detail, acquired by the leading house in this kind of trade yet takes of the miraculous. Once an important contract given them the utmost care is taken that not only the quality of the arms shall be such as is required, but that all the minutiæ of detail as to delivery shall be carried out with nicety to the letter.

The profits in the business must be immense. When times are peaceful, stocks may be accumulated at very low figures. Good guns may be had then at prices ranging from one dollar and one half up to five or seven. They may stay in the warehouse for one or two years or more, when suddenly the rage for slaughter seizes on some unhappy country, and they become eager purchasers of these arms at four or ten times their original cost. Cannons costing two cents a pound, bought when bombardments were at a standstill, of little but cabal at ten or twelve cents a pound.

Ammunition is harder to handle. With a variety of ranges and different forms of projectiles, saving for certain accepted styles, the market is a close difficult one to manage. Though the deterioration in metallic cartridges is very small, it is not the paper and powder that is the considerable. Bergamo, however, are frequently picked up, the value of the lead paying a profit, even when the powder is worth nothing more than the saltpetre in it. The manufacture of metallic cartridges has become so large, and the competition of copper so much increased by their use, that it is a matter of fact that the price of this metal is mainly due to this cause. In the United States the manufacturers of metallic cartridges are busy all the year round, and each is the perfection and rapidity of the machinery employed, that the metallic quantity can be produced at a moment's warning. It is a mere question whether our Government would not do better if they discontinued entirely the manufacture of either arms or ammunition. It costs enormous sums every day that the only the Government have for such establishments to keep up, when the supplies furnished by companies are manifest.

There is a pretty picture by LANDSEER, in London, probably, to stand off our shores. On a pleasant breezy day, a gentleman in Scottish costume plays a little child who watches a string of butter-cups, which a gaily dressed boy drags the sweet grass growing from the very mouth of some long-forgotten carronade. It identified "grass." This picture may be a good lesson. You it hangs in ever so many happy homes. You may visit, perchance, in a quiet way, Windsor, in close proximity to where many distinguished firms will conclude with you, in a perfectly honorable way, a transaction which has for its termination the cruel death of 10,000 human beings. When peace shall reign on earth, we must consider it. The world has waited for it ever so long. Perhaps some day we pen may be mightier than the sword.

That was a very sad and cynical humorist who said, "Yes, the lion may lay down with the lamb, but it will only be when she lion has had the lamb for his supper."

FINE ARTS.

Opening of the Metropolitan Museum of Art—Private Sale.

The pictures purchased in Europe by the Committee of the Metropolitan Museum of Art have recently been removed to the temporary gallery, No. 681 Fifth-avenue. There are 174 paintings in all, chiefly specimens of the Flemish school, though among them will be found examples by VAN DYCK, VELLASQUES, Sir JOSHUA REYNOLDS and GARZIA. Of the authenticity of the pictures no doubt can exist, as their history can be traced from their original owners upward to the present time, the larger portion of them having once belonged to the galleries of Louis Philippe, Cardinal de Polignac, the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg, the Marquis Maison, Duchess de Berri, Edward Emerson, Lords Shaftesbury and Hastings, and Cardinal Fesch and Rubempre.

Yesterday a private view of these pictures was offered to artists and members of the Press, and of the principal works we propose to give a brief notice. The most striking among them undoubtedly is "The Return of the Holy Family," by PETER PAUL RUBENS, which formerly belonged to the Museum at Brussels. The canvas has apparently been cut, and the work is so strikingly unequal in merit that we may well doubt whether the figure of Joseph is not by a less skillful hand than that of RUBENS. The figure and countenance of Mary, too, are commonplace, but the expression on the face of the child Jesus is surprisingly beautiful as he turns his head to look up at his mother. Near this large painting is a small one by VAN DYCK—"St. Martha Interceding for the Stoppage of the Plague." The figure of the saints, which is beautifully painted, is surrounded by angels. The expressions are admirable, and the color remarkably pure. The idea of the composition appears to have been taken from MURILLO, and in growth and fervor of expression it is almost equal to his work. A portrait of a young lady, also by VAN DYCK, is weak in color, poor in drawing and stiff in attitude, and gives an adequate idea of the power of this "master of portrait painters," being, probably, a very early work. Sir JOSHUA REYNOLDS is represented by a portrait of Mr. EDWARD HUGHES. The face is finely modeled, the expression strong and the color tasteful. We may gain some idea of the basis on which Sir JOSHUA'S fame rested by an inspection of this work. JORDAENS is represented by two large works, "The Infant St. John Visiting the Infant Jesus," and "The Triumph of Bacchus." The last is extremely disappointing. The expression is certainly strong, but the drawing is simply ridiculous. The left arm is about eight inches longer than the right, the shoulders of Bacchus are those of a boy rather than of a man, and the wrists are apparently dislocated. The first-mentioned work is, however, very fine in many respects. The two children are, it is true, badly drawn and painted, the Jesus especially so, but the strength of expression on the faces of the persons surrounding them has never, we think, been surpassed. Take the countenance of the wrinkled old woman and of the lad looking over her shoulder. Where shall one seek for anything equal to them? This picture once belonged to the famous Abbey of Abervode, most of the treasures from which are now in the Pinakothek of Munich. A strong and noble portrait of "The Count of Milan," by BORDONE, also claims attention. The fine, bold features are admirably molded, and the whole attitude and expression convey the idea of the patrician soldier. The largest canvas in the collection is the "Diogenes and Alexander," by GASPARD DE CRAYER. It was once in the possession of the Empress JOSEPHINE, and for some time ornamented the saloons of Malmaison. It contains some twenty life-size figures, and represents the interview between the all-conquering soldier and the cynic philosopher. The painting, taking it altogether, is not a striking one. The face, person and attitude of Alexander are commonplace, and, in fact, disappointing. The philosopher, as he reclines at ALEXANDER'S feet, is the most naturally posed and best figure of the whole. The color generally is good, and the expression strong. The only specimen by GREUZE is the head of a young girl, a study for one of his larger pictures, which, though finely molded and possessing great strength of expression, gives the idea that it has been retouched. It is, nevertheless, a notable work. Among the landscapes are a picturesque one by HUYSMANS, taken from a castle of the Marquis of HARTZOG, but possessing no special merit; two or three fine works by RUYSDAEL, "A view on the Alkmaar, being especially worthy of notice; a good specimen of PAUWELS, and two superb works by EDUARDI, besides many others of merit. FRANS HALS'S portrait of "Hille Bobbe Van Harlem" must not, however, be forgotten. It is a marvel of expression, and, perhaps, the most striking of the smaller pictures in the collection.

It is to be regretted that the Committee having charge of the pictures should have allowed some of them to be retouched so skillfully as they have been. In one or two cases the varnish has been laid on so thick that a person looking at the picture sees his own face reflected therein. One of the best RUYSDAELS has been treated in this manner.

In the preceding notice we have referred, and thus briefly, to the most prominent paintings only in the collection. There are many others worthy of note to which we shall call attention hereafter. In regard to the admission of the public to the Museum, we understand that for the present, it will be by invitation of members only. It is fully intended, however, hereafter to make the collection entirely free to all. Within a few days, we believe, the location of a temporary Museum in the Central Park will be decided on.

PICTURE SALES.

A remarkably choice collection of paintings from the gallery of Mr. W. H. STEWART, of Philadelphia, the well-known art connoisseur, is now on exhibition at the LEAVITT ART Galleries, No. 819 Broadway. Mr. STEWART has been residing in Paris for the past five years, and has resolved to dispose of his art collection in this country rather than assume the risk and expense of removing it to Europe. It comprises specimens by BEILLOUIN, PERRIN, CARL BECKER, HUDDEMAN, WILHELM SCHLESSINGER, and other well-known foreign artists, with a choice selection of water-color drawings by FIDELY, HARDING and RAYBOULD, of the English school. Some fine specimens from the Gouphi Gallery are also on exhibition at No. 819 Broadway, of which we shall give a more extended notice hereafter. The sale will take place on the evenings of the 27th and 28th instant.

At the Somerville Gallery a sale of a private collection of oil-paintings will take place on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings next, among them we notice works of George H. Boughton, (a charming landscape,) T. L. Smith, William Hart, Bastman Johnson, Casilear, Page, S. J. Guy, Gignoux, Moran and others.

The Case of Dutch Heinrich—He is Committed for Trial.

The examination in the case of HENRY NEUMAN, who is better known to his friends in the Central Detective office as Dutch Heinrich, who is charged with having stolen $43,000 of the first mortgage bonds of the Appalachian and New-London Railroad and a promissory note for $11,000 from the office of J. S. KENNEDY & Co., No. 41 Cedar-street on the 15th ult., was commenced by Justice HOGAN yesterday. Not any evidence was taken, but the time was occupied by the arguments of the counsel. Mr. W. F. HOWE, counsel for the defendant, in his argument contended that his client was not one of the men who had stolen the bonds. The client knew positively nothing about the theft. He (counsel) knew who the thieves were, and was informed of the place where the bonds had been left for safe keeping, and for the violation of his professional confidence, he could prove each both the thieves and the bonds. The evidence would be given in chain from the owners of the bonds to the place for the restoration of the bonds, and full details.

Mr. GARDNER, counsel for the Board of Brokers, replied briefly to the statements advanced by the defendant, and Justice HOGAN then requested the counsel for the defendant to find $15,000 in bonds, and to have them at the action of the Grand Jury, the amount of bail. Mr. HOWE was looking up the bonds at the Tombs.

THE ROTTEN BANKS.

The Market Savings Bank—What Mr. Patterson Has to Say—His Transactions With Conklin.

The Market Savings Bank was again crowded, yesterday, with depositors who were anxious to get their money. Many persons accomplished the object, receiving, making in all 1,000 persons who have proved their debts. The election of an assignee will take place on the 12th of March, and a Commissioner in Bankruptcy will attend at Hartford, Conn., to examine the proving of claims. Among the heavy debtors of the bank is Mr. C. G. PATTERSON, who owes $10,000. This gentleman's name has been unpleasantly mixed up in the affairs of the institution, and, to set himself right with the public, Mr. PATTERSON makes a statement, the substance of which is given below, of his entire transactions with the bank.

Mr. C. G. PATTERSON is the general agent in New-York of the Derby Coal Company of Pennsylvania, and has held that office for four years. He first became acquainted with CONKLIN, the defaulting secretary, by staying at the same hotel with him. Mr. DENNIS, the ex-receiver, stated shortly after the collapse of the bank, that CONKLIN had been the victim of PATTERSON, who was accused of being a confidence man. CONKLIN, he says, represented himself as a man of fortune, and manager of the Market Bank, and Mr. PATTERSON says that he never doubted his integrity and his strict attention to business. On the 16th of October, 1871, Mr. PATTERSON required, some money for business purposes and applied to CONKLIN, with whom he was very intimate. The latter agreed to lend him the required sum, as PATTERSON supposed from his private resources. He received $16,500 from CONKLIN, giving as security first mortgage coupon bonds of the Derby Coal Company of Pennsylvania, to the amount of $22,000. On the 26th of December, 1871, Mr. PATTERSON borrowed $1,625 from CONKLIN, giving as security two promissory business notes, which are not yet matured, amounting in the aggregate to $1,505. These Mr. PATTERSON declares are the only monetary transactions he ever had with CONKLIN, and with these exceptions he never had any business, direct or indirect, with the Market Savings Bank. On the 9th of February inst., soon after the bank suspended payment, and, as he declares, before he had received any communication from the authorities, he wrote to the effect that he had received no notice of claims to be made against him, mentioning the sums of money which he had received from CONKLIN. PATTERSON also says that the blood horses formerly in the possession of CONKLIN, and afterward seized by Mr. DENNIS, were obtained from him (PATTERSON) under false pretenses. In conclusion Mr. PATTERSON states that he never had, and has not now, the most remote intention of defrauding the bank in any way, but is ready and willing to pay all just claims upon him.

Mr. WORTH, the receiver, states that he has sent several communications to Mr. PATTERSON requesting this debt, and so far has received unsatisfactory replies. If Mr. PATTERSON will pay this sum, his name will be relieved from the very large amount of odium now attached to it.

An official of the bank was called upon yesterday, and upon being shown Mr. PATTERSON'S statement said that to the best it was true, and his accounts of his financial transactions with the bank were quite correct.

The latest rumor about CONKLIN is that he is residing in Nevada, working some valuable silver mines which he purchased with the money alleged to be stolen by him from the Market Bank.

The Guardian Savings Bank—Sale by Auction of the Furniture and Fixtures.

The furniture and fixtures of the Guardian Savings Bank were sold by auction yesterday. Mr. DOUGHTY, (not "Doty," the Cashier,) officiated as auctioneer. The sale only realized $612 37. The largest figure was obtained for the walnut partition in the outer office, which was knocked down at $126. The large safe manufactured by MCBRIDE DAVIDSON, was not sold. A communication was received by Mr. QUINLAN, the Receiver, from Mr. Controller GREEN, stating that the safe had been paid for by the City two years ago. A large steel engraving of "Boss" TWEED hung in the outer office, received many derisive offers of sums varying from five cents to a dollar, but Mr. QUINLAN intimated that the ownership of that valuable work of art was doubtful, so that the tempting offers had to be declined. One gentleman expressed deep regret at this decision, as he stated that he had intended purchasing the portrait, and adding it to his already large collection of "Municipal Rogues."

The payment of depositors was resumed at 12 M., and the same backwardness was observed in the creditors, many of whom went away unpaid, though their money is waiting for them.

The Bowling-Green Savings Bank Adjudicated a Bankrupt.

In the case of the Bowling-green Savings Bank, which came up before Judge BLATCHFORD yesterday, in the United States District Court in Bankruptcy, counsel for the receiver was allowed to appear as amicus curiæ; he contended that as the bank had been dissolved previous to service, having been attempted in the bankruptcy proceedings, there was no bank to serve the order upon; that a receiver, as a State officer, had been appointed, and the affairs of the bank committed to him for settlement, and therefore the matter was now exclusively in the jurisdiction of the State Courts. The bank had created the bank, and had dissolved it, and had now taken possession of its dead body; and all this had been done before service was, as contended by the petioner, made in the bankruptcy proceedings. There was, therefore, nothing left for the bankruptcy Court to acquire jurisdiction over.

Judge BLATCHFORD said that points substantially the same as these had been repeatedly passed upon by him, and always adversely. There was not a shadow of doubt but that the Bankruptcy Court had complete jurisdiction if proper petition was made.

The bank was then called in the formal manner, and no appearance being made on its behalf, an order adjudicating it an involuntary bankrupt was directed to be entered.

MILITARY GOSSIP.

We have received a copy of the memorial addressed to the Legislature by the Seventh Regiment relative to the bill providing a site on Reservoir-square for an armory for that command. The memorial states at length the various important services rendered by the Seventh since its organization in 1821. Among these we find mention of the "Election" and "Abolition" riots in 1834; the "Stevedore" riot in 1836; the "Flour" riot in 1837; the "Croton Water" riot in 1840; the "Astor-place" riot in 1849; the "Police" and "Dead Rabbit" riots in 1857; the "Draft" riot in 1863; and the "Twelfth of July" riot in 1871. Allusion is also made to the fact that during the great rebellion the Seventh furnished from its ranks over 600 officers to the regular and volunteer army and navy of the United States, who were distinguished for their valor and patriotism, and many of whom won high military rank upon the field of battle, and sixty of whom sealed their devotion to the country with their lives. The new armory is also claimed on the ground that, prior to 1858, the members were subjected to great expense for rent of suitable quarters. The remainder of the document is devoted to specifying the desirability of the proposed site. The fact is, the Legislature ought to take such action as will provide proper barrack room for all of our City regiments, because at present none (except the Twenty-second) are in possession of proper facilities for practice in extended movements. Reservoir-square could accommodate several regiments and afford ample space for drill purposes. If the square is to be given up to that purpose let other commanders have a chance.

The Sixty-first Regiment will give a grand full-dress reception on Washington's birthday (next Thursday) at the armory, corner of Broadway and Thirty-fifth-street. The affair will, no doubt, be a pleasant one, as the Committee has been untiring in its preparations.

A series of wing drills commenced in the Twenty-third Regiment on Thursday last. The next two occur on March 4 and 12. This command has made great progress during the Winter.

The Burnside Guards, of Norwalk, Conn., announce another entertainment, their fourth annual sociable, to come off at Military Hall, on the anniversary of Washington's birthday.

The Congressional Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in Washington have discussed the subject of a statue of General Scott, to be placed in Scott-square, and agreed to report a resolution to the House for the erection of such a statue.

It is claimed that the Richmond Light Infantry Blues is positively the oldest company in the United States—excepting the Ancient Artillery of Boston, which may possibly have the advantage of it by a few years.

The new uniforms for the Mansfield Guard, of Middletown, have arrived. They are neat and serviceable. Capt. Smith drilled his and walked through Main-street on Friday, to show it to the citizens, many of whom had subscribed money toward the purchase of the uniforms.

The Emmet Guards, of New-Haven, recently elected the following officers to serve for one year: Captain, T. Sheridan; First Lieutenant, M. Foley; Second Lieutenant, F. Little; First Sergeant, D. Carroll.

Resignation of the officers of the Connecticut National Guard was held in the Hamilton-Guard parlors, on Wednesday, about thirty officers, representing all the regiments, being in attendance. The Committee appointed at a previous meeting to prepare a constitution and by-laws for a permanent organization, which was discussed at length and adopted by sections. The name of the organization is "The Officers' Association of the C. N. G.," and its object, the development of the interests of the Connecticut militia. Gen. Rufus Ellsworth was elected President.

A new military organization has been formed in Albany entitled the "Crowley Guard," with Wm. H. Lombard, as Captain.

Lieut.-Gen. Doyle's term of service in the Division expires in May. He will be relieved of the command of the troops and the Governorship of the Province of Canada. A strife as to his successor in the Governorship.

The reports from Montreal of crack regiments having been ordered from England for Canada is unfounded.

The Regal Artillery in Halifax is under orders for England, and will leave shortly. It will possibly be followed by the Sixteenth Regiment.

Much interest is manifested in Boston about the militia armories, and the city authorities

The New-York Times.

NEW-YORK, SUNDAY, FEB. 18, 1872.

The New-York Times,
DAILY, WEEKLY AND SEMI-WEEKLY.

This journal is now thoroughly identified with the greatest political necessity of the hour—unremitting warfare against all forms of corruption, whether in national or local governments. For years past the TIMES has been exposing the demoralizing influence of self-interested politicians, and its unremit warfare upon the Tammany Democrats has been received with universal approval. It has adhered to the pledge given in its original prospectus, more than twenty years ago, that the public should be fully represented, and their interests faithfully guarded through its columns. Its record has been pure and honorable, and the highest aim of its proprietors is to render it more and more worthy of its past history, and of the confidence which the public reposes in it. Two out of three of the original proprietors still direct its policy, and guide it on all public questions. They purpose that the TIMES shall continue to keep clear of all narrow and unworthy influences and aliques, and aim to represent the great body of the public, as distinguished from personal factions. It occupies a perfectly independent position, and is free to speak the truth on all subjects and about all men. Its greatly increased circulation throughout the country adds to its power and influence. It will continue to be a faithful exponent of Republican principles, and advocate with untiring energy every cause which tends to further the welfare of the people.

The utmost care will be devoted to gathering political news from special sources during the Presidential canvass. This department of the paper will be unusually full and trustworthy. Renewed enterprise will be exhibited in every department of the paper, and large space will be devoted to reports of speeches made during elections, or on other important political occasions.

A very full summary of news, and many general articles of great interest, are published in the Semi-weekly editions; and in the Weekly edition there is an unabridged report of the proceedings at the Farmers' Club, an excellent summary of political information, and a great variety of matter suitable for family reading.

The NEW-YORK TIMES is pre-eminently a family paper, all objectionable advertisements being rigidly excluded; and it has a constantly increasing circulation among the most respectable classes of the community.

In accordance with a suggestion made in the TIMES of yesterday, the Committee of Seventy have resolved to call a mass-meeting of the citizens of New-York, without distinction of party, to give an expression of opinion in regard to the charter now under consideration at Albany. We trust that no friend of Reform in this community will fail to recognize how vital it is that a decided expression of public sentiment on this subject should be conveyed to the Legislature. There have been politicians in abundance at Albany during the session whose first half has now closed. Claiming to represent the feeling of this community, they have, with a few exceptions, grossly misrepresented it. It is absolutely necessary, at the present stage of the Reform movement, that both branches of the Legislature should have no excuse for pleading ignorance of the real demands of the City of New-York. We trust that the gathering on Tuesday will be worthy of the great occasion which calls for it.

The estimate of the current expenditures of the City and County Departments up to April 30, submitted at yesterday's meeting of the Board of Apportionment, is framed in accordance with the existing necessity for retrenchment and reform. In comparing it with the appropriations made under the Two per Cent. act, it must be remembered that the twenty-eight and a half millions apportioned by HALL, TWEED, SWEENY, and CONNOLLY did not nearly cover the actual expenditures of the year. Various items fell short of the amount legally required for certain purposes, and as the act itself was a fraud upon the public, the appropriations made under it, were intended to be so, too. Keeping out of sight the six and a half millions already voted to meet revenue bonds, the present Board of Audit and Apportionment, intrusted with the paying away of seven and a half millions to meet deficiencies created by their predecessors. Tested in this way the estimate submitted by the Controller and his colleagues, seems an exceedingly fair and economical one, and the tax-payers have the additional satisfaction of knowing that it meets all legal requirements, and that no Department will be allowed to exceed the allowance made to it.

If the Tribune will not desist from printing corporation advertisements without legal authority, because it is a swindle upon the City, it may be induced to discontinue the practice because payment will be refused. If it has heretofore doubted this fact, the prompt rejection, at yesterday's meeting of the Board of Audit, of all claims which had no legal sanction, ought to produce conviction. The Tribune claims to know something about "the elements of common morality." A moralist who should lavish eulogy upon honesty while endeavoring to abstract his listener's pocket-handkerchief, would be in pretty much the same position as the Tribune morbidly, with its swindling City advertisements on one page and its tirades against corruption on the other. We observe that Controller GREEN, in his estimate of the four months' expenditures of the City, only allows the Corporation Council some $3,333 for advertising. As the Tribune has run up a bill of at least twice this amount, already, it will be a somewhat puzzling question to determine by the 1st of May, what proportion of the sum voted belongs to the other eight daily and eight weekly papers which have been, we suppose, as industrious as the Tribune in this little game of trying to cheat the public.

Auditing Under Difficulties.

If any one was unable to appreciate the force of our strictures upon the clumsy and mischievous legislative device of making believe to audit City accounts in open sessions, by three officials, a slight attention to the nature of the business transacted by the Board of Audit should be sufficient to make it clear. Let any reader run his eye over the mere titles of the claims which are gradually being disposed of by the new Board, and then let him ask himself whether it is, in the nature of things, possible that a mass of doubtful and complicated liabilities like these, can be examined and passed upon at various sittings of half an hour to an hour each. Had MAYOR HALL presided over the sittings of such a Board, of course the task would have been easy. That distinguished and versatile public servant had a free and easy way of interpreting the obligations of auditing. One-half hour's session was found quite sufficient by him and his colleagues to dispose of some six millions of most outrageous claims against the City, in a way perfectly satisfactory to the people who presented them. As the President of the new Board of Audit is Mr. ANDREW H. GREEN, a somewhat different meaning is put upon the verb "to audit," and it is understood to be necessary, according to Mr. TILDEN's definition, "to hear, to judge, to determine whether the claim is valid, and how much is properly and justly due upon it." If hearing, judging and determining were to be as exhaustively done as the public interest demands at the open sessions of this Board, they would have to sit throughout every business hour of six days in the week, and would then hardly get through more than three or four claims a day. In point of fact, the Board makes no pretense of auditing at all. It simply hears read the titles of claims, remits them for the examination of the Department of Finance, and acts according to the recommendation made by the Controller in regard to them. No other course was possible, and the Board has simply shown its good sense in not attempting to carry out impossible legislative provisions.

Auditing is the purpose for which the Department of Finance exists, and how thoroughly the function is being performed under its present headship may be understood by a reference to the bills reported at yesterday's Board of Audit. Here are a few samples of the claims which were refused payment.

Morgan Jones, rent of District Court.....$1,875
[Held under leases which are declared invalid.]

Catherine Bradley, rent for Sixth District Court..... 1,350
[Property really owned by JOHN J. BRADLEY, who, as City Chamberlain, could not legally make a contract with the City for his personal gain.]

William M. Tweed, rent for Fourth District Court..... 6,750
[Refused for reason similar to the above.]

M. L. Kenney, work at Marine Court..... 9,234
[A familiar bill, long since exposed by the TIMES. Note by the Controller—"This work was done without contract, and the charge is excessive." A fair charge would have been short of $900.]

M. L. Kenney, work on County Jail.....12,505
[The same objections as in previous claim.]

James W. Fowler, for balance of salary.... 4,166
[The Police Justice who is accused of having robbed widows and orphans when in the Surrogate's office. Note by Controller—"The City not indebted."]

Michael T. Daley, claim for services..... 5,000
[Services not rendered.]

Silicocks & Conley, for Gold Badges..... 4,900
[Not purchased by any lawful authority.]

&c., &c.

The forty-six thousand odd dollars, above detailed, are but a small portion of a mass of fraudulent, exorbitant or illegally contracted claims reported yesterday. Under the short and easy method of auditing practiced by HALL and his colleagues, they would, unquestionably, have been paid, with the exception only of those out of which two-thirds of plunder could not be secured. Under the honest and exact method of Controller GREEN, the tax-payers are simply saved several hundreds of thousands of dollars, and a check is given to frauds on the Treasury, which will remain a salutary precedent for many years to come. It must be obvious to everybody that such work cannot be done without incurring a great deal of personal abuse, if not personal danger. Mr. GREEN would have made himself exceedingly popular among the loafers and rowdies who figure upon Tammany pay-rolls, and the swindling tradesmen who enjoyed Tammany custom, had he shut his eyes to the illegal nature of their claims. The tax-payers, though poorer, might not have been much wiser, and the rascals, instead of venting threatenings and blasphemy as they did yesterday, would have been devoted supporters of the Controller. TWEED's sinecurists have badgered and persecuted Mr. GREEN since the first day of his entrance on the duties of his present office, and the disgraceful scene which followed the close of the proceedings of the Board of Audit yesterday, was merely an outbreak of the pent-up hatred of honesty among the men whom Tammany nourished at the City expense. During the last four months the discharge of the duties of the Controller's office has required an amount of energy, of honest determination, and of positive heroism which the public can but faithly appreciate. Mr. GREEN has fought, almost unaided, the battle of the people against rapacious office-holders and disappointed hangers-on of the most corrupt Government the country has seen. He has still to bear the brunt of the battle, and it is fitting that his fellow-citizens should extend him all the moral support which is in their power.

A Compromise Compromised.

We learn from Washington that the Joint Committee of Congress which has the copyright question under consideration, will probably report a bill which will be a compromise between the one proposed by the Copyright Association and the one which is called the Publishers' bill. The latter has hardly a right to its name, it having received only nine of the fourteen votes cast upon it, five having been cast against it, while four of the publishing-houses at the meeting declined to vote, and the representative of one, who declared against it, retired before the vote was taken. Possibly it was owing in a measure to this indication of feeling that Mr. WILLIAM APPLETON, who is the author of the Publishers' bill, became also its "finisher," by expressing, as we are informed, a willingness, at the hearing before the Committee, to accept the bill drafted by the Copyright Association, with the proviso that the books of foreign authors copyrighted here should be manufactured in the country.

This proviso first appeared, we believe, in a bill drafted some ten or twelve years ago by Senator MORRILL, the father of the ultra-protectionist tariff bill which bore his name, and who is now Chairman of this Joint Committee. The purpose of this proviso is plainly enough to protect the American book-manufacturer, (not the publisher,) against the British book-manufacturer. This protection is in fact the bone of contention in the copyright question. The unwillingness is, not to paying the foreign author for the use of his book, but to admitting the foreign publisher and book-manufacturer to the American market on equal terms with the American publisher and book-manufacturer. The price of books on their first publication is generally much higher in Europe, and particularly in England, than it is in the United States, but books can be printed much more cheaply as well as better in England than here; and the American publishers and book-manufacturers fear, and reasonably fear, that if an international copyright should place the foreign publisher on the same footing here as the American members of the trade, there would be a speedy end to the manufacturing of the books of British authors in this country. This view of the case was first presented in an article by Mr. GRANT WHITE, which was published in a London magazine, and afterward here in pamphlet form, four or five years ago, and it was therein set forth without any reserve or mitigation. That article has borne fruit on both sides of the water, as was shown by a letter from Mr. MACMILLAN, the eminent London publisher, to the London Times, the occasion of which was Mr. WILLIAM APPLETON's letter to the same journal, in which this same point was made, although in a more indirect and covert way. The more intelligent and thoughtful members of the trade in England, as well as most of the British authors, now plainly see the true state of the case, and are, most of them, not unwilling to conform to the practical necessities of the situation.

The expression of a willingness to withdraw the Publishers' bill as a whole, was wise under the circumstances. The narrow, exclusive, and somewhat selfish nature of some of its provisions, laid it open to objections even from the more liberal-minded of the publishers, as was well shown in the able minority report drawn up by Mr. SEYMOUR, of the firm of SCRIBNER & COMPANY, which was also laid before the Congressional Committee. If we can have a copyright law that will secure the foreign author the same just renumeration here for his labor which is paid to the American author, while at the same time the dominant protectionist notions are enforced by a provision which secures the American book-manufacturer against the dangerous competition of his British rival, we shall have arrived at the best practicable solution that can at present be expected of this long-vexed and really not easily solved question. To be sure the foreign author will not be quite satisfied; neither will his American brother. But payment for work done according to its market value will have been secured to all authors.

On the other hand, publishers and book-manufacturers must be willing to endure a certain competition on the part of their foreign rivals. For a law that would absolutely exclude the foreign publisher from this market would be so odious that, should such an one be passed, it would soon be repealed. There must be some contrivance by which the light-going foreign publisher may be weighted for the otherwise unequal race, by a tariff provision which would produce the desired equality on this point. But, by the payment of a lawful copyright royalty to the foreign author, the American publisher would obtain the absolute control of the publication and manufacture of his book in the United States—something that he cannot now secure to himself by the payment of gratuities and honorary fees, or the obtaining of early sheets at high prices. We should then see an end of the "cut-throat" policy, too often put in practice among our publishers, of reprinting books "on" each other, and selling them at prices that hardly pay for printing and paper. We should hear no more of the entire disregard of the rights of authors by publishers who have issued some of their works, and who therefore refuse to allow them to deal unmolested for others with other publishers on the ground that they must perfect their sets, to protect their "property." We should then have removed one constant source of mutual irritation through the Press that now exists between the two countries; and these are great points to be gained. Therefore, although the authors are not likely to get a perfect recognition of the right they claim, and which, in the abstract, certainly cannot be denied, consistently with reason and honesty, we welcome this compromise of their interests, and those of the honorably disposed publishers who are willing to admit the author to a share in the price of his labor. As for the others, those who have [illegible] money by the use of other men's work, and who daily thus lay, night's wheneve, of dishonesty in that work—men who seem to congregate chiefly in Philadelphia—we commend them to the pen of the moral and satirical writers of the day, with little commiseration for their miserable fate.

The Empire Again.

The indications of an impending movement for the restoration of NAPOLEON Third-ton in Paris, and if the conspirators do not defeat themselves by being over-precipitate, the chances of the Empire may become very strong. That M. THIERS is himself of that opinion, has been made clear in various ways. "If NAPOLEON had a hundred millions of money," said the President of the French Republic a month ago, "he would be in Paris in fifteen days." These sudden and dramatic returns of the Bonapartes are no novelties. The cable tells us that M. ROUHER's carriage was mobbed last Friday, when approaching Père la Chaise in the funeral procession of CONTI, formerly the Emperor's private Secretary: and this is represented as an Anti-Imperial demonstration. No doubt it was so; but partisans do not "demonstrate" against that of which there is no danger, and the circumstances of the case were peculiar. The cortège consisted almost exclusively of friends of the Emperor, and M. ROUHER, who had just been returned to the Assembly as member for Corsica, after a hot election, now stands as the very head and front of the supporters of the Empire. Naturally enough, the Republicans and Communists of the crowd—and what Parisian crowd is without both?—expressed their hostility. But there were also shouts of "Vive l'Empereur," just as there were a fortnight before when "Rasbas" was brought out at the Vaudeville; and just as then there were signs of the kind of French feeling from which anything or everything may come, the sparks that might light up swift conflagration, the passion that brings about revolution in a day.

The impatience of the French people under the existing order of things is unlikely to be diminished by what protracts the indefiniteness of the present situation or augments future uncertainties. So long as there was a chance for the fusion of the branches of Bourbon and Orleans there was something to look forward to, even if it excited only speculative interest. There was positive material, that is to say, for a possible Government. But "HENRY V." will not have it so, and people resent his refusal who would never in any case be his supporters.

Thus the manifesto of the Count DE CHAMBORD helps NAPOLEON by decreasing the candidature of rulers, and the "fusion" proposed by some of the Bonapartist journals as between their own and the old Bourbon side, perhaps, implies as much kindliness as irony. It is certain that the temper of the Assembly is very different from what it was a year ago. At that time the bare mention of NAPOLEON brought forth volleys of execration. Four men tried cautiously to stem the torrent of wrath and without effect. Now, on Jan. 24, one of the members for Marseilles, M. NAQUET, brought a bill into the Assembly that looked very like a deliberate test, or as if it had been constructed for a formal trial of strength. The bill proposed to confiscate the property of LOUIS NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, and apply the proceeds toward payment of the expenses of the war. The preamble of the bill set forth that in the month of July last LOUIS NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, being at that time Emperor of the French, declared war against Prussia without being ready, and without giving the Corps Legislatif the means of exercising an enlightened judgment on the subject, and that in consequence he, the said LOUIS NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, came within the provisions of articles 1,382 and 1,383 of the Penal Code—(tumult, laughter and great confusion)—which compelled any individual having caused damage to repair the wrong. It was therefore proposed that LOUIS NAPOLEON BONAPARTE should be declared responsible for the disasters of the war and the invasion, and tried by the National Assembly, and that his goods should be sequestrated in the meantime.

M. NAQUET demanded "urgency" for his bill, but could find only twenty hands held up to support him, and the measure dropped. Founded on almost precisely the same grounds, the bill exiling NAPOLEON and his family forever that was brought into the Chamber Feb. 24, 1871, was carried with shouts of approval. Within the year a bill merely to confiscate the property of the dethroned monarch is even refused discussion. A correspondent says that in fact M. NAQUET was savagely hooted on the reading of his bill, and that the denunciations of it were quite as loud and fierce as when, eleven months ago, four or five Bonapartist Deputies tried to defend their old master from the attacks of the whole Assembly. The difference is very striking, and although the restoration of the Empire may be still a long way off, and may even not come to pass at all, it is very plain that the idea of such a thing is much less distasteful to the representatives of the French nation than it was a year ago.

Working Men's Clubs.

Clubs are multiplying among us in spite of the dark cloud that has come over the "American," and the wailing and gnashing of teeth heard among the once jocund "Blossoms." There are regular Clubs of the old-fashioned types for gentlemen, and irregular Clubs of the new-fashioned type for ladies, and Clubs of no particular type for a score of different classes and as many purposes; but we hear of no Clubs as yet for "Working Men," although there are excellent reasons why, in New-York, such institutions should exist.

Of course the first objection is that a working man's best Club—like that of "any other man"—is his own fireside; and if he has a fireside, this is a proposition we shall not gainsay. But the trouble is that, while a great many working men are single, a great many married men pass their evenings in gossiping and throwing away the money that [illegible] impossible for a man of his pecuniary condition in life, to give a fair share of attention to both home and Club, and to enjoy the advantages of both. Dealing with facts as they are, we find the aggregate of money spent in rum-shops by people who work for daily wages to be something enormous. To say nothing of the health squandered, and the morals corrupted by these resplendent dens, the cash alone expended in them would go far in a year to pay off the City debt, large as the gruggeries have helped to make it. There cannot be a doubt that the habit of going to these places springs, to a great extent, from a feeling of isolation. Light, warmth, and boon companionship are strong temptations, especially to those who, having worked hard at manual labor all day, have no need of mental repose. Now, if light and warmth and congenial society could be found in a clean, well-regulated set of rooms, where a choice of the best newspapers and other periodicals could be read promptly on their issue, where chess, draughts, and the like could be played, and where common interests could be discussed and furthered, who can tell how much good might be done for working men, or how far their clubs might go to redeem this great City from the curse of ignorant and misguided suffrage?

If it is admitted that such Clubs would be better places of resort than "gin-mills" or corner groceries, the next objection is to the cost. It is manifest enough that the expense would not be a tithe, or anything like it, of the money which, in the absence of working men's Clubs, is spent for bad liquor; still this kind of argument is usually rejected, and we pass to others. Lord DERBY has lately shown, in a speech widely circulated, how workmen in the North of England have established co-operative stores, and similar institutions, and precisely the same principle is applicable to clubs. American working men can certainly do what any foreigners of the same class can do, and we should expect them to do it rather better. But there is another way of getting over the difficulty, and that is by private enterprise. If a really suitable place were started as a working man's club in New-York, conducted on sound economic principles, and kept thoroughly respectable, we do not doubt its commercial success. Some of the most famous Clubs in the world were started as private speculations. In the end the habitués, instead of paying the proprietor, gave him a round sum for his interest, and paid a manager thereafter instead. Rents are high in New-York, and the conditions otherwise would, of course, be different. Still, by the proper combination of numbers, locality, and business management, together with the publicity sure to be given to such a movement by the Press, we are confident Working Men's Clubs in New-York could be made to succeed.

Home Amusements—Private Theatricals.

One of the things to which people in large cities hardly give the attention its importance merits, is amusement for the home circle. The young men of a family are driven to seek diversion away from home in ways that are not always improving. No parents who have at heart the welfare of their children, can see this tendency without regret. Yet it lies mainly in their own hands to change or convert it to the strengthening instead of the weakening of household ties. With the exercise of a moderate degree of taste and discretion, the fireside may be made the centre of all pleasure as well as the focus of all affection. Only to do this, as with any other object worth achieving, some time, thought, and trouble must be given.

Every family of average cultivation and intelligence has within itself ample resources for amusement, which only need to be systematically cultivated and developed to bear fruit in infinite variety of innocent enjoyments. We know of one household, for example, where each one of a number of sons has been taught to play on a different musical instrument, so that they constitute a complete orchestra in themselves, and are the means of furnishing a vast deal of entertainment to their friends. In another, each of the children has been carefully instructed in part singing, so that they are able to amuse their little circle with frequent ballad concerts, or even at times a minor opera. In such systematic adaptation of music to purposes of domestic recreation, our German fellow-citizens could give us many a lesson. But all people have not the taste or the capacity for this thorough cultivation or appreciation of music. For these, diversions must be sought in other sources.

Reading aloud from the poets or classics of English literature by one member of the household, with comments and criticisms by the rest, would be found a pleasant and profitable way of spending many a long Winter evening. Or where talent existed to justify the change, these recitations might be agreeably varied by original compositions. Again, the spice of novelty might be added by requiring that each person in the family should be prepared, on assembling for the evening, to contribute some new element to the common fund of amusement—an unfamiliar song, a witty story, a fresh anecdote, a reminiscence, a curious illustration in history or science. Ingenuity and research could be stimulated by rewarding with some trifling prize the contribution which should be voted best.

These are only hints which a reader of quick apprehension will readily multiply. Probably among the most effective of all devices for home amusement must be ranked private theatricals, yearly growing more in popularity in New-York. They may be made to serve the pleasure of many or few, and they do not require, though they may involve, considerable outlay of money. People in moderate circumstances may enjoy them quite as thoroughly as people of wealth. A little dexterity and a nimble fancy will generally contrive to dispense with the aid of a professional costumer, and for most plays which amateurs are wise in trying, a sufficient stage and scene. Of course, between this there is ample room, and room enough for the most elaborate scenic display. Some city homes have attached to them ministers theatres completely fitted up, where plays are performed, and even entire operas sung, with a perfection of mounting and a finish of execution not always seen on the professional stage. But these are for the epicures of the pastime. The great majority of its votaries must be content with such simple mechanism as ordinary home resources can supply.

But, even with the slenderest equipment, parlor theatricals are found to be the source of much substantial enjoyment. First, for the actors there is the continuous fun of the rehearsals, culminating at least in the tremulous delight of the public debut. For the audience, too, there is a charm in the representation, however crude, which no professional performance could impart. The mutual alacrity to please and to be pleased creates a kindly current of sympathy between stage and audience, which exaggerates every merit and disguises every fault. The actors are not half as anxious to succeed as their hearers are to have them. The connoisseur and the critic forget here their frowns and their prejudices, and are willing to see in each young comedian a Garrick or a Peg Woffington at the very least. But, indeed, with many of our amateur performances there needs no such stretch of indulgence, and plays acted in private parlors often reveal an unexpected amount of histrionic ability.

Considered as a social exercise, parlor theatricals are not without utility. They certainly tend, if properly conducted, to cultivate freedom and ease of manner and correctness of elocution. To some extent, too, they help to develop perception of character. In their most delightful form, so popular in France, as yet less favored here—the charade—they even help to sharpen wit and to brighten fancy.

Responsibility for Railway Accidents.

The painful record of railway slaughter to which the American public have grown so sadly used, has had of late many notable accessions. For a week past every day has made an addition to the fatal score. For the most part these successive massacres have presented the same stereotyped features, differing only in the number of their scalded, crushed, and mangled victims. Most of them, too, have been distinguished by that same cheerful absence of responsibility which must inspire the average American railway official to look upon a smash up, costing a score of lives, very much in the light of a diversion. But, at least, two of the late accidents have varied from this familiar pattern in having somebody clearly to blame for their occurrence. In each case, too, the culprits are self-convicted. In the collision near Evansville, Wis., of a freight and a passenger-train, on the Chicago and North-western Road, the conductor of one of the trains admitted that he had received, but had forgotten, orders to stop at Evansville until the arrival of the other train. In the precisely similar disaster at Alton, the conductor of the passenger-train coolly telegraphed from the wreck that he had mistaken his time-table, and then ran away.

Now we suppose it is part of a railway conductor's business not to forget or to misunderstand matters on which the lives of his passengers depend. Under such circumstances as these, forgetfulness or error cannot be explained or palliated on any ground of human fallability. They are simply criminal negligence of the grossest sort, calling for a rigorous punishment. We hope to see in the case of these two unfaithful public servants that punishment impartially meted out. Judging from the past, it is not probable that it will be. Only a day or two ago the conductor who was held responsible for the Revere massacre in Massachusetts, and who was punished by suspension from office, was restored to duty. We do not say that this may not have been essential justice. Possibly the man was made a scapegoat for the misdeeds of his superiors. But to hold him out as guilty before the world, to inflict on him a penalty so entirely inadequate to the offense, and finally to restore him in a few months to the same post for which his unfitness was proved by his disgrace—this is simply to invite disaster and to put a premium on incompetence and neglect. Not until we recognize and act upon the truth that blunders in its management are criminal, will railway traveling ever be even tolerably safe. The confessions of these two conductors we have mentioned, offer a chance to establish this novel doctrine in a way that shall secure the respect of all railway officials. Let us see if the chance is improved.

Marriage and Money.

Among the various letters of our correspondents on the "cost of living" there have been many from young men signing themselves "Old Bachelors," and professing either entire contentment with their state of celibacy, or a fixed intention to remain single until they can marry heiresses. Naturally this frank expression of an enlightened selfishness has evoked a corresponding outburst of feminine scorn. On either score the plea of these degenerate men seems, to the womanly way of thinking, intolerable and base. The man who declines to marry because he thinks he can be more comfortable single, is only less despicable than he who refuses to marry any but a rich wife. The lack of magnanimity in the one is hardly less discreditable than the sordid calculation of the other.

This is the spirit in which women are apt to receive masculine manifestoes of this sort, and one cannot refuse a certain measure of sympathy to their denunciation. To most girls, educated as they are at present, marriage offers their only career, almost their sole available chance of happiness. The instinct of the sex for self-sacrifice either causes them to shut their eyes wholly to the manifold discomforts of a straitened household, or leads them to see in these shortcomings an attraction rather than a drawback. The old proverb that where poverty comes in at the door love flies out of the window, shows to their simple and tender faith the greatest of heresies. Besides their early experience, if not their almost intuitive skill in the small economies of life, teaches them to believe that, so far from increasing, they would be able to lessen, the expenses of their husbands, while adding to their happiness. And when, moreover, it is considered that most girls, before marriage, give little thought, and that of the vagrest kind, to the trials of wedded life, while dwelling lovingly on its romantic aspects, it is not surprising that they should be shocked at seeing their fondest aspirations weighed in the balance against a few selfish comforts or paltry dollars. They are willing to meet sacrifice with sacrifice, to put up with privation and poverty, for love's sake; and this cold, practical summing up of chances wounds and repels their generous self-abnegation.

This is apt to be a woman's way of looking at the matter, and it is not to be denied that its rashness is more excusable than the excessive prudence of these dismal "old bachelors." It is generally true also that the expenses which deter this class of reasoners from marriage are not in the main for their necessities, but for their luxuries. Cigars and drinks and billiards often make up a total which must go far to defray the additional expenses of matrimony. Nor can it be deemed a very worthy aim for a young man of health and energy to set his heart upon getting a rich wife for the sake of her wealth alone. That is a line of effort on which Victory is very often fatal to happiness.

In their discussion with the old bachelors, the ladies have certainly had the best of it so far as they have gone. But there is this point further to be considered: A conscientious man desirous of marrying, but feeling that his means are inadequate to support the woman of his choice in that degree of comfort to which she has been accustomed, will hardly feel justified in exposing her to risk of hardship, and possible misery. He has enough for one, but no finesse of household management can make it enough for two. It is clearly in this spirit that the letters of those old bachelors are written, and that many other bachelors, old and young, are daily more confirmed in. Whether it will work any corresponding change in the most important of our social usages is a point of greater uncertainty.

OUR SAVINGS BANKS.

Lecture at the Cooper Union by Prof. Van Amringe—Some Good Advice Offered to Depositors.

Mr. VAN AMRINGE, Professor of Mathematics in Columbia College, delivered a lecture at the Cooper Institute last night upon the subjects of "Savings Banks" and "Life Assurance." The gentleman's remarks upon life assurance were delivered for the purpose of explaining minutely its principles and theory, so that every person, who now looked upon the whole subject as a mystery, might have their eyes opened to the immense good which life assurance could do, if divested of the speculative nature which now characterized it.

On the subject of savings banks, the lecturer said: Banks of issue and discount and savings banks ought to be totally dissimilated. The former exist chiefly for the convenience and protection of the rich, the latter for the benefit of the poor. The first thing demanded of a savings bank is absolute security of the funds entrusted to it. It was the losing sight of this primary idea that led to so much recent distress. The late failures ought not, he said, to shake the faith of any man in the excellence and stability of the system, when properly administered. For more than fifty years these institutions have shed their benign influence on society, and in all this time, with over a thousand million dollars at stake, less than one cent in a $100 was lost by unfortunate investments, and not one cent was ever lost by fraud or dishonesty till the year 1871. In the early part of that year the system received a shock by the failure of a comparatively small institution in Buffalo through dishonesty of its Treasurer, and that has been followed by failures in this City. Unhappily, as the best sound banks are based upon a special charter for itself, into which may be introduced, by accident or fraud, objectionable features, and the whole may be committed to persons unworthy of the trust. There should be a general banking law, under which all such corporations might organize. The interest of the 700,000 depositors in this State, and the $300,000,000 of money held in trust for them ought not to be subject to the caprice of successive Legislatures and the craft of designing men. Wherever you find a bank conducted on conservative principles, where the security of the principal is more thought of than the increase of it, have no fear. A general law, rigidly enforced, would release us of constant circumspection, which is tiresome, by informing us what to expect in whatever institution we placed our money. Such a law might with advantage include such requirements as the following: Not one cent of the deposits ought ever to be touched for the expenses. If the corporators are not willing to guarantee them till the earnings become adequate, they should not take the office. Enough of deposits being reserved to meet probable demands, the rest should be invested in the very best securities only. On such securities, in ordinary times, six or seven per cent is all that can be realized, and not more than five per cent should be promised to depositors. If at any time the condition of things would warrant it, extra dividends might be declared. The trustees should always be men of known integrity and good business capacity. They should receive no other compensation for their services than the consciousness of doing good to their fellow-men, and should give bonds for the faithful execution of their trust. Many a poor man has been lured to his ruin by the magic of a name, which to him meant security, and to the bank was but the shadow in which rascality flourished.

After some further remarks the speaker concluded a very interesting lecture.

Base-Ball on Ice—An Exciting and Remarkable Game at Prospect Park.

A remarkable contest at base-ball took place, yesterday afternoon, on the ice at Prospect Park, in the presence of a large concourse of spectators. The contestants were the Capitolines and Prospect Park Tens. It was the occasion of their return match together, the first of which, played last Thursday, resulted in a victory for the "Caps" by a score of 19 to 17. FANCHON pitched for the victors in that game. In this Franks pitched, and no effective was his delivery and so fairly was he supported in the field that the Park Tens were unable to score a single run, something unprecedented in the annals of games on the ice. The Capitolines made thirty-seven runs. The first of a new series between the same teams will be played on the Capitoline Lake on Wednesday, and the return game at the Park on Saturday next.

Reckless Pistol Practice.

Between 6 and 7 o'clock last evening, white car No. 128, of the Bushwick-avenue line, was passing through Hudson-street, and when near the corner of Perry-street, a pistol was fired by some unknown person on the sidewalk. The ballet passed through the hat of the driver of the car and struck a pipe in the mouth of a man standing beside him. No further injury was done, and the person who fired the shot escaped.

The pay-rolls for cleaning the offices of the Civil and Police Courts, the Croton Aqueduct Department, &c., for September, October, November and December, were audited and allowed.

The pay-roll of the excess and redman for October, November and December, 1871, amounting in whole to $[illegible], were ordered to be paid.

A resolution was adopted to pay the salaries of the coroners, clerks, &c., of the Tax Receiver's office for September, October, November and December, 1871, amounting to $18,139 34.

The pay-rolls of persons employed at the free public baths during 1870 and 1871, amounting to $[illegible], were allowed.

The Controller stated that the following claims did not come within the jurisdiction of the Board of Audit for reasons stated below in parentheses:

New-York Times, advertising	$[illegible] 50
Irish Citizen	1,000 00
Tri-Weekly Herald	2,520 00
Courrier des Etats-Unis	2,000 00
Scientific Publishing Company	27,648 75
Le Messager Franco-Americain	225 00
New-York Argus	1,500 00
Office Bureau	7,000 00

(These claims were not allowed for the reason that no authority was given for the publication of the advertisements.)

John D. Brown, for rent of premises 504 of Fifty-sixth-street, from May 1, 1871 | $750
James Whelan, rent of premises 1008 of Fifty-third-street, from May 1, 1871 | 250
Thomas B. Davies, rent of office, Nos. 14, 16, 18 and 20, No. 32 Chambers-street | 375
Morgan Jones, rent of District Court | 1,375

(These premises were not rented under leases with the City Corporation, but were held, and for this reason the Board of Audit refuses to allow the claims.)

CATHARINE BRADLEY, rent of premises No. 9 and 11 Underclaw for Sixth District Civil Court, $1,125. (This claim was not allowed by the Board, but Mr. Jesse J. BRADLEY, who was City Chamberlain, by law providing for taking possession in the street under which money was to be paid out of the City Treasury.)

WILLIAM M. TWEED—Rent of premises corner Fourth-avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-third-street, for the Fourth District Police Court, $1,000. (This claim was not allowed by the Board, Comptroller GREEN being absent, and he wished to be satisfied the claimant was an officer of the Corporation, and prohibited by law from being interested in any contract with the City. It appears to be a fact of the City Treasury, that the said TWEED is indebted to the City in large amounts, greatly in excess of the amount claimed by him.)

JOHN O'BRIEN, for repairs, cleaning a well, in 1870, corner of One Hundred and Eighty-sixth-street and Kingsbridge-road, $[illegible] 25. (This claim is not within the jurisdiction of the Board, not having been received in 1871.)

Thirty Nuns and school, quarter ending Dec. 31, 1871, $6,000 00. (There was no appropriation for this school.)

M. L. Ramsey, work at Martha Court, $9,250 56. (This work was done without contract, and the charge is excessive.)

Chas. Moore, increase of salary in Bureau of Street Improvements, January, 1870, to April 11, 1870, $554 78. (The increased salary was not authorized by any lawful authority.)

Alexander V. Davidson, the increase of salary as third clerk in the Bureau of Street Improvements, $554 78. (This claim was not authorized by law, and the City owes Mr. Davidson nothing.)

James W. Fowler, for balance of salary for 1871, as Justice of Third District Court, $4,166 66. (The City not indebted; the salary is $5,000; no balance of this salary was unpaid.)

Michael T. Daly, assignee of Dr. R. B. O'Callaghan, claim for services, $6,000. (The services claimed were not rendered.)

R. Farrer & Co., work done in 1870 on County Jail, $[illegible] 98. (Not within the jurisdiction of the Board.)

Samuel R. Smith, regulating and paving West Washington-place in 1869, $[illegible]. (Not within the jurisdiction of the Board.)

Sillicocks & Conley, for gold badges, $4,000. (Not purchased by any lawful authority.)

Patrick Farley & Co. M. Randall, work on Madison-avenue, $15,000. (The work as claimed was not executed, and the work which was actually executed was excessively charged for.)

Perris & Brown, maps for the County, $[illegible] 50. (Disallowed, the Board having no jurisdiction.)

M. L. Ramsey, work on County Jail, $12,[illegible] 00. (The same objections as on the previous claims of Mr. Ramsey.)

M. M. and Chas. Levis, services as poll-clerks, election 1871, $30. (Not within the jurisdiction of the Board.)

Jose P. Navarro, for water-meters, $[illegible] 50. (No lawful contract was made and no lawful authority given on the part of the City for the supply of the meters specified, and the claim is not within the jurisdiction of the Board.)

Harlem Gas-light Company, gas, $31,[illegible] 65. (The charge is exorbitant, and greatly in excess of the quantity and quality of gas supplied.)

Middleton Bell, Odell & Mills, removing night-soil, $7,700. (Not within the jurisdiction of the Board.)

The following is a statement of bills remaining unpaid for work and supplies furnished the Police Department during the year 1871:

And various other bills, amounting in the total to nearly $80,000.

Messrs. LAWRENCE and CADY presented a report as to the Water Police claims, which stated that the number of police was ninety-two, and that from inquiries at the Department of Public Works they find that the number of Police authorized to be employed was twenty-four, and that a large number of those whose names appear on the pay-roll of this Police Department have not been employed. They therefore cannot recommend the payment of any of the names mentioned in the roll.

During the presentation of this report one of the spectators asked Controller GREEN, with an oath, when his (the speaker's) pay-roll would be reached. The Board adjourned to Thursday next, amid much confusion. The crowd then became very boisterous, and for a moment a breach of the peace was imminent. Several of the men in the crowd used profane and disgusting language toward Mr. GREEN, and one of them even threatened him with personal violence. The crowd at once proceeded to the Finance Department building, and made an effort to force open the doors, but were not successful.

OBITUARY.

B. F. Washington.

The California papers just received announce the death of Mr. B. F. WASHINGTON, an editor of the San Francisco Examiner, at the age of fifty-two years.

Mr. WASHINGTON was a Virginian by birth, and a lineal descendant of a brother of GEORGE WASHINGTON. He went to California in 1849. In 1850, at the organization of the Sacramento City Government, he was elected Recorder, which position he held for one year. In 1852 he and VINCENT E. GEIGER established the State Journal, which became a prominent and influential Democratic organ.

He subsequently purchased the Times & Transcript. During the following session of the Legislature a strong effort was made to force an election for United States Senator, which if held regularly was not to take place until the next session of the Legislature. The object was to elect BRODERICK as opposed to GWIN. Mr. WASHINGTON gained great prominence by his opposition to this scheme, and succeeded in overthrowing it.

In 1857 he was appointed by President BUCHANAN to the Collectorship of the Port of San Francisco. His appointment was the prominent cause of the breaking off of BRODERICK's support from President BUCHANAN. In 1860 he retired from political life, and turned his attention to agricultural pursuits. These proving distasteful to him he connected himself with the Examiner in 1864.

Mr. WASHINGTON, as a politician, was strongly partisan. As a writer, he was terse and vigorous, especially when treating of political subjects from the stand-point of the old Virginia school of Democracy. As a man, he was highly respected for integrity. His deportment was ever gentlemanly and dignified. His social relations, both in his family circle and among his friends, were most pleasant. He leaves two sons and two daughters, all of mature years. His death is deeply lamented by a large circle of warm friends.

A Prince's Dwelling Gone.

The old Napoleon Hotel on Washington-street, Hoboken, is being demolished to make room for the erection of a public hall and tenements. It was in this building that the Prince NAPOLEON, while an exile in this country, boarded, and from him it took its name. On the breaking out of the Franco-Prussian war in 1870 the feelings of the Germans who frequented the hotel were so bitter against the French Emperor that in order to retain his German customers the proprietor was obliged to paint out the old name which extended so as to give the whole length of the building. On the conclusion of the war, however, and the defeat of the French with the exile of their Emperor, the old sign was repainted. The building will now be entirely removed.

An Absconding Watch-Maker Captured.

About two weeks ago EDWARD HARRISON, a watch-maker, of No. 9 Burling-slip, decamped from this City, and with him disappeared seven gold watches and one silver watch, which had been left with him for repairs by customers. Search was made for him, but without avail. Several days ago JOHN HAWKINS, a New-York pilot, living at No. 216 Jay-street, Brooklyn, paid a visit to Philadelphia, and was surprised to find HARRISON there, working at his trade under the name of Martin Cooper. As HAWKINS had lost a valuable gold-watch by the disappearance of HARRISON, he caused his arrest by Detective SMITH, of Philadelphia, and he was locked up to await the action of the New-York authorities. During his absence HARRISON had been informed, and on learning of his arrest a requisition was obtained from Gov. HOFFMAN, armed with which Detective WALLING of the Central Office succeeded in finding and taking charge of the prisoner and brought him to this City. He was arraigned before District-Attorney GARVIN, and committed to the Tombs for trial. In his possession were found several watches, for cases of the gold watches which he had pledged in this City for money he left, and the eighth watch was found on his person.

ASSASSINATION AS A FINE ART.

The Subject in General and its Eastern Developments in Particular—The Hashish and the Mohammedans—Assassins—The Manner of Lord Mayo's Death.

Assassination as an attribute of humanity has attached a romantic variety and careful culture bestowed on few things. There are as many ways of killing men as of cooking eggs, and an infinitely greater number of reasons, or what in the assassin's mind pass for such. A man cooks because he is hungry, or is conventionally supposed to be, or for some one else in a like predicament. He may kill a man, or woman, or tender suckling infant for the same reason, but the practice seems to be generally confined to nearly starved shipwrecked sailors, or cannibal gourmets in Fiji, or somewhere else in Oceanica. As wisdom came from the East, so did assassination. As there is some wisdom among us, so there is some murder. We have our Brinvilliers in triplicate, or in larger series, as required for the sensational Press, almost always with us; sudden deaths with knife, pistol and slungshot, or anything handy, "short, sharp and decisive," in plenty; but although retribution may not be as swift as is desirable, the habit of homicide is generally discountenanced, and except in the "code," which is rapidly exploding itself by the absurdity of its recent fiascos, it is nowhere any longer fashionable in America or Europe. For thoroughgoing, unadulterated atrocity, murder for the sake of murder, we must refer to the East, or occasionally, perhaps, to the Western descendants of the Asiatic "Phayneecians," whose divine right to shoot landlords from behind hedges, or riddle informers, or knock on the head those who presume to question the divinity of the Pope, or to doubt the alleged immorality of Queen ELIZABETH, or the undoubted fact that WILLIAM of Orange had cloven hoofs, or some such issues so pertinent to modern civilization is not among things to be doubted.

The word assassin is derived from the Arabic, and was bestowed by the Crusaders on the followers of the Old Man of the Mountains—an obedient college of dervishes or religious fanatics, who fortified themselves for their desperate deeds with Dutch courage, in the shape of hashesch, a preparation of the Indian hemp. Everybody has read Monte Cristo, so it is needless to dilate on this charming drug, which opens paradise to its devotees, stifles conscience, and bestows insensibility to pain or danger. Hashesch, or bhang, another name for the same thing, is as great a favorite as ever in the East, and is as responsible for more interference with the even current of human lives than even Sixth Ward whisky. That Lord MAYO, the Viceroy, and the Chief-Justice of India were victims to a trifling excess of stimulant on the part of their mild assailants is beyond a peradventure. Murder, especially of the dominant race is not thought objectionable by Orientals. Might makes right, and sic vobis is the motto universally acted up to with a business-like completeness, even at this day, which wholly eclipses what we consider the somewhat violent proceedings of squabbling barons in feudal times. But they have a wholesome regard for their skins, as a rule, and if his assassin had not been "under the influence," his life would have been quite safe with him or in the midst of a thousand like him. Without insisting on those far East tribes of Malacca and the Archipelago, whose gay young bachelors cannot become established till they have accumulated a stock of dried skulls as household ornaments, or when habit of running amuck, killing right and left has necessitated laws to extirpate them like other frenzied beasts, murder is a normal domestic convenience in the Oriental mind, and it is no slight item in the catalogue of British oppression that repression of their harmless indulgence in it is enforced.

It is no doubt an unwarrantable interference with time-honored custom to put in jail, try and speedily hang a man for simply removing an obstacle from his path. Although a whole-some dread of the law exists, there is still a good deal of murder, calmly and almost with impunity, executed by the sober Hindoos, with a good deal of fuss and feathers by the unwary and bhang-bewildered Moslem. Infanticide is a regular thing, religiously kept secret among hundreds of sympathizers; too numerous or feeble children, especially the female ones, when it becomes a matter of serious form, or a serious matter for a prudent parent's looking ahead, are put away like superfluous puppies. Thuggism or strangulation of wayfarers after hospitably sharing the social meal was a feature of Hindoolism. It is to a great extent stamped out, but such things occasionally happen even now in India than even in New-York, so that a careful statistician might find it difficult to account for sundry discrepancies in local roll-calls on any other hypothesis than that of the unobtrusive belong hand to the realms of Hades. But "death in the pot" is the grand stand-by of the good Hindoo. Many a tiresome squabbler about the management of the goods of his "undivided family" finds himself afflicted with severe and griping pangs, and retires peacefully from this world of strife on the ebb of some holy river, or soars in spirit after the manner of a Pheasant, while his devoted children filially stir up the fire which consumes his crackling bones.

When the Hindoos think their cast, however, safely practice their cruelties openly, they have never shown themselves backward in adding all the delat possible to the private enjoyment of their ingenuity in torture. Rajahs are extolled in popular ballads, or rather epic poems, for the variety and exquisite cruelty of their punishments. Britons still grow with an unappeased, sickening horror at the hated name of Cawnpore, and such cheerful incidents as the cold-blooded cutting down of good and good-natured men, but now reported, or the periodical assaults on ladies and officers on the frontiers, whose less prominence causes a failure of an appearance of their cases far from their immediate localities, does not tend to increase Indophilism. Tearing criminals or non-criminal victims asunder by wild horses or elephants, racking, the strappado, exposure to wild beasts, starving to death and so forth, are but a trifling exaggeration of the old rough foundation of their tortures, on which they elaborated with infinite patience and wonderful inventive genius. To this day in "protected" territories, such as Afghanistan or Muscat, the first thing the victor in a battle does is to put out his prisoner's eyes or lop off his limbs, and if it happens to be a father, son, uncle or brother, the fact merely serves to impart an extra zest to the sweets of victory. In fact, it is considered rather meritorious than otherwise for anybody to kill anybody else who may offend him or stand in his path in any way, and between cunning, bhang and native rashness, the principle is acted up to with commendable regularity. The Mohammedans, as a rule, don't trouble themselves with poison, nor, indeed, with stealthy assassination. They simply fill themselves with wrath and rum, or bhang, or all three, and trust to the cold-steel. Fatalistic, believing in the certain and instant reward of heaven if they kill an infidel, and with the slight hold to life which characterizes most savages, the Mussulman is a dangerous animal to come across in his fanatic moments. Being chopped into sausage-meat immediately after his outrage would be an additional incentive. Pain would be unfelt, and he would escape the reaction from the drug, fresh supplies of which would not reach him to soothe his declining moments as a prisoner and the suspense and horrors of solitary confinement, which even a native with all his stolidism, nerve and sequiscence, must feel. Beside, it is the habit now, or rather questionable humanity, perhaps, to burn the bodies of Mussulman murderers, which in their belief insures death irredeemable to body and soul. The mere hanging is supposed to achieve a similar eclipse to all starting for the delectable Hindoo. Then the convict who killed Lord MAYO had any feelings, however slight, resembling in the remotest degree the supposed ancient Roman virtue of a BRUTUS or even the modern Roman virtue of MAZZINI, will not be believed by any one who knows the breed. It was nothing but bhang, mere devilry, and a discreditable carelessness on the part of the convict establishment. Bribery, of course, got him the bhang, and he was probably in a wood-cutting gang, carelessly guarded by a couple of lolloping natives of superior physique and admirably armed for sudden attack with the Burmese dha, a formidable cutlass to which the medium to serve machets of Spanish American ancestry is a circumstance. But this is digressing into a treatise on the Andaman Islands, which is totally opposite to this place. Sufficiently has the Mussulman been shown to murder his stepfriend. It is not a pleasing trait, and it is a pity that so much of it, in however improved a form, has found its way here. It must be the last degradation of a white man to commit murder, and lower himself to the level of the brutes who prey on each other in the mystic wilds of Asia.

SUMMARY OF AMUSEMENTS.

Stupendous and Shortest.

Quite a lively week has followed the long dearth of novelty at the theatres. Mr. BARRETT's first Academy appearance to open took place at the Academy, before a very enthusiastic audience, on Monday. The work performed, HAROLD's "Zampa," was positively as new to New-York as the chief singer is it, and the occasion warranted the extended notices printed on Tuesday. "Zampa" was repeated on Wednesday with equal effect, the bills have been varied by performances of "Don Giovanni" and "Martha," and the brief season of English opera closed last night with "Fra Diavolo," of which we shall have more to say to-morrow.... Mr. WALLACK revived the "Veteran," one of the old successes of his house, on Monday. The piece has been long in preparation, and the public expected something creditable; we may say with most, however, that the reality goes far beyond what was looked for. The scenes and dresses of the "Veteran" come so close to perfection that only hypercriticism can detect the dividing line, and the acting is capital. A house packed to the ceiling showed last night the best form of public appreciation, for the treasury at least, and the quality of the applause and the encores chosen to bestow it were what managers and artists like Mr. WALLACK sometimes find more grateful still. The "Veteran" will doubtless run for many weeks.... Mr. J. S. MACKAYE contributed to the novelties of the week by bringing out "Marriage" and this adaptation has been played nightly at the St. James Theatre since its production. "Marriage" is a weak play, but it has given Mr. MACKAYE scope not afforded by his initial effort here to show the stuff he has in him, and his pupil, Miss GREWOLD, to do herself and her teacher much credit.... A new "sensation" for the honors of the stage vanished upon it at Niblo's on Monday. This is a learned goat, whose accomplishments, long ripening to maturity, have quite captivated the votaries of the "Black Crook." The creature is really quite wonderful in its way, and that is at least no more objectionable than some other of the ways of the "Crook"—considered in their relations to dramatic art. So long as the covert satire of making the animal a "star" in such a spectacle afflicts neither his fellow-artists nor his admiring beholders—we need say nothing but praise of his present professional achievements and of the promise of his future.... "Julius Cæsar" continues the suffering attraction at Booth's. That thoughtful and rising young actor, Mr. LAWRENCE BARRETT, has concluded his engagement here, and to-morrow Mr. J. B. BOOTH is to play Cassius. Mr. BARRETT's previous contrasts would not allow any extension of his stay in New-York at this time. He has made an exceedingly favorable impression in the Metropolis and will be heartily welcomed whenever he may return. Mr. J. B. BOOTH will play Brutus, it is said, after a time, and Mr. EDWIN BOOTH Cassius. The chance will cause curiosity, and, we should say, would be an improvement on the disposition to be first made.... Mr. DALY still runs "Divorce," and on WASHINGTON's birthday plays it with his company in Philadelphia, returning in the evening for the regular performance at the Fifth-avenue. We may look next to hear of the company acting the piece say at Boston in the morning, at Springfield in the afternoon, and at New-York at night. Its run at the Fifth-avenue gives no token of slackening. Miss AGNES PERRY, who, long ere this, was to have opened in "Frou Frou," is winning golden opinions in the provinces, and "Frou Frou" is left indefinitely in peace. ..... The horses, and other things that go to make up the "Wonderful European Hippotheatron Company" have left the Grand Opera-house and sought more congenial localities elsewhere. To-morrow the "Mulder-Fabbri Troupe" begin at this house in opera. As the Parepa Company have closed at the Academy, the operatic field will be quite clear, and we do not see why the Mulder-Fabbri party should not do a good business. The opening work is to be NICOLAI's "Merry Wives of Windsor." We hear of immense preparations going forward on the next spectacle at this theatre—a drama founded on MOORE's Lalla Rookh, which is to transcend for magnificence, we are assured, anything ever seen here.... Wood's Museum is doing an excellent business with Miss MARION MORDAUNT in "Darling," the lady appropriately acting what some people like to call the "title-rôle."..... At the New-York Circus the usual flourishing work is going on. Mr. LEE is the right man in the right place, and the public know it. There is always a good show where he is, and never anything for careful parents to object to.... Whoever fails to drop in at DAN BRYANT's, in Twenty-third-street, now and then, makes a great mistake, and loses many a hearty laugh. There is always excellent feeling there, and constant changes of programme give things an air of perennial freshness.

TO-MORROW'S CONCERT.

At the grand concert to be given in Steinway Hall, to-morrow evening, for the benefit of the Zenana schools in India, Miss CLARA LOUISE KELLOGG has, with her customary kindness, volunteered to lend the charm of her presence and voice. The public will also have the pleasure of listening to Mlle. MOLLENHAUER for the first time since her return from Europe. During her absence abroad Mlle. MOLLENHAUER has appeared in opera in Berlin, Paris, St. Petersburg, London, and other European capitals, besides fulfilling a very successful engagement, just before her return, at Havana. The fine qualities and high culture of her voice have elicited warm admiration wherever she has appeared. She will also sing on the 22d inst. with Miss KELLOGG, at the Brooklyn Tabernacle, for the benefit of the Sunday-school of that church.

Foreign Gossip.

The London Globe, writing of the latest Monday Popular concert, says: "At the second concert the young South American pianist, Miss THERESA CARRENO, who played several times with great applause, last Autumn, at the promenade concerts of M. BENEDICT, in Covent Garden Theatre, and board for the first time of Mr. CHAPPELL's entertainments, and received with such force, Miss CARRENO's music was the encore in E flat, No. 7 of BEETHOVEN's "Op. 81"—composed of the short famous "Wooldrich" so-called by everybody except the composer. Her touch is wonderfully musical; and her conception of this and very familiar compositions, which had only been previously enjoyed at St. James' Hall by Mr. HALLÉ and Mme. NORMANN, was characterized throughout by strongly marked accent and vigorous expression. At the termination of her performance Mlle. CARRENO was summoned back to the platform."..... It is stated that Covent Garden Theatre will next Autumn be turned to a new and original purpose. The direction of the Winter season, extending over nearly eight months, has been accepted by Mr. BOUCICAULT, and the opening piece—a new fairy spectacle, to occupy the entire evening in performance—is already in the hands of the scenic artists. The entertainment will combine the various elements of pantomime ballet and burlesque, and will be from the pen of Mr. BOUCICAULT, with new music by OFFENBACH. ..... Brussels has always set up the claim to possess one of the first operas in Europe. To the lessee of the Theatre Royal de la Monnaie the Communal Council gives the house free of rent and a subsidy of 80,000 francs a year in cash. For some time past, however, great dissatisfaction has been felt with the lessee, and new arrangements are to be made. The King has declared his willingness to augment considerably the subsidy paid out of the Civil List. Part of the Brussels Press proposes now that the Communal Council should take in hand the direct administration of the theatre, and confide, after the German fashion, the direction to M. GEVAERT, the head of the Brussels Conservatory of Music..... OFFENBACH, apropos of the production of the "Rot Carotte," is once more the subject of anecdotes in the petite journaux some of which, though they may be of a certain commercial advantage to him in keeping him before the public, are not precisely calculated to raise him in public opinion. At a rehearsal of one of his works he found, we are told, a violinist practicing in a corner of the orchestra by himself. "What is that man playing?" he asked. "Violin concerto by MENDELSSOHN," was the reply. "Oh, yes, I remember," said the maestro; "I was afraid at first that it belonged to my opera." As a further illustration of OFFENBACH's "naïveté," we are informed that on some one's asking him whether he was not born at Bonn, he made answer, "No; it is BEETHOVEN who was born at Bonn. I was born at Frankfort?"..... A new theatre in the Giardino Sciarra at Rome is completed. It is constructed entirely of wood, but is extremely comfortable and commodious, containing 15,000 spectators. The house will be opened with opera bouffe..... The performance of "Aida" at Cairo continues with the same success, and the public flock to the theatre in crowds, desirous to contemplate the ancient luxury and splendor of the Pharaoh's Court..... A telegram from St. Petersburg sets forth that Signor ADELINI gave his benefit concert at Odessa on Saturday, Jan. 20, and it was a "magnificent success." The house was crowded in all parts, the receipts amounting to 30,000 francs. "Tarantella," a new song, which was expressly composed by Signor ADELINI for Mme. ADELINA PATTI, was received with immense enthusiasm, the composer and singer being recalled several times.

Death in the Tombs—Alleged Neglect of a Police Surgeon.

On Thursday afternoon an unknown man was found in a semi-conscious condition in the streets by Patrolman KELLY, of the Third Precinct, and taken to the station-house in Chambers-street. Police Surgeon SAMUEL B. OSTRY was summoned, and after examining the man, who gave his name as CORNELIUS J. DILLON, said that it was a case of intoxication and ordered him to be sent to the Tombs. He was accordingly arraigned before Justice HOGAN, who sent him below, and summoned Dr. NEALIS, the physician of the prison, who examined the man and found him to be in a dying condition. He was at once put under proper medical treatment, and rallied sufficiently to inform the authorities that his name was JOHN B. DUGGAN, that he was a chemist, and his wife and family resided at No. 2,307 Coates-street, Philadelphia. He then sank into unconsciousness and expired at an early hour yesterday morning. It is believed that if Dr. Ost

PASTOR HELDRING AND HIS WORK.

BY J. E. D.

The Steenbeek Asylum is one miler's walk from Hemmen, in Holland, close by the village of Setten. A sandy country road leads up to the grounds, which contain between seven and eight acres of arable land, surrounded by a brook. Having entered the simple wooden gate, you find a bell to announce your arrival. Steps approach from the inside. A bolt is removed, and the door of the establishment is opened by a female. You observe that you cannot enter unnoticed, and that nothing prevents the inmates from leaving when they like. This arrangement is characteristic of the spirit of the institution. The world is prevented from coming in; the inmates are at liberty to go out.

The premises cluster together in an irregular form. An old brewery turned into an asylum could not well produce a master-piece of architecture. Still, the two new portions of the building are got up in a cheerful, home-like style, in which taste and simplicity are combined. A barn, stable and several sheds stand in the rear, and further back two Dutch farmhouses protect the Asylum from the north-west wind. The whole is surrounded by kitchen gardens and orchards, which again are shut in by a fence and two rows of spland. The grounds are not over-planted with trees, the aim is plainly to give illumination the pretty landscape, and the pure country air ventilate the rooms and passages of the house. The inmates can easily enjoy a refreshing walk without indirect supervision, and there is opportunity for useful labor. There are the milk-house, garden, fields, stable with its cows, poultry yard and dairy for such girls as are being trained for the farm. There is the spacious laundry, with all required apparatus, not only for home washing but for doing up the fine linen of the neighboring gentry. There are the lofty kitchen with its utensils, the comprehensive pantry with Winter provisions, from sauer-kraut to gerkins, prepared by the girls themselves, the bake-house and threshing floor, drying-loft, and bleaching-house, dormitories and infirmary, dining-hall and work-rooms, making as complete an establishment for the end Pastor HELDRING has in view at Steenbeek as is well possible. From the dormitories you enter, through a short passage, the tastefully furnished dwelling-rooms of Miss VOURE, the lady Superintendent, and the six gentlewomen who assist her. Here those girls who evince a talent for a higher grade of service than that of the farm or kitchen are trained as chamber-maids and ladies' maids. A little house adjacent is for the reception of the new-comers, who stay there till the company for those of the larger house. In the centre of all these apartments is the charming prayer saloon, where every morning and evening the household meets for worship. It is fittingly placed in the centre, to remind the inmates that the knowledge of God is the fountain of all that is taught at Steenbeek.

Into this institution more than 1,300 fallen women have been received since 1848. Its spacious apartments give shelter and refuge at any one time to no more than eighty. Of these no single individual is compelled to stay beyond a day. The all-ruling principle upon which Pastor HELDRING has based the institution is that of perfect Christian liberty. This, however, is not to be understood in a sense at variance with principles of order. Common rules are prescribed to the whole household, to which every member must submit. The girls, for instance, are never to take a walk outside, nor to go to church away from the premises. Each has her own bed-chamber, into which she is locked at night. They are early risers; Winter and Summer the clock striking five turns finds everyone astir. Family worship, conducted by one of the presiding ladies, opens the day. Four meals unite the girls around the family table; breakfast at 6, dinner at 12, tea at 5, supper at 8. Then the evening prayer dismisses them to rest.

The work for the girls progresses from lower to higher. New-comers are placed in the matting-room. This is the lowest degree. All must learn to make mats, because it is the simplest way of earning a livelihood, and straw can be obtained everywhere. Those who behave best and excel most fares promoted to the sewing-room, then to light garden-work. After that they may assist in the kitchen, and then are raised to the rank of cooks and house-maids. The highest grade is that of lady's maid. To be degraded to a lower degree is counted severe punishment. Those who are refractory are put back to mat-making. If obstinate, the girl is sent to her chamber for a day, in order to make choice between submission and dismission. As an example, a stubborn girl, after a day's reflection, decided to leave.

"Do you remember," asked Pastor HELDRING, "how often you have told me the same story, standing where you are now?"

"I don't."

"Still it might be as well for you to remember it; for I do not know any one upon whom so much mercy has been bestowed as upon you."

The girl is silent, and so is the pastor. "But, as you like," he continued, after a pause. "You have said you are determined to go. Very well. Do what your heart impels you to do. As for me, no sooner will you have left than I shall shake the dust off my feet against you. I want no knowledge of you in this world or the next."

She went away, but only into the room where the other girls were at their work, and silently resumed her place among them. "How is this?" asked the lady superintendent, "Are you back again?"

"The pastor told me to act as my heart wished, and that now tells me to stay."

It will be seen from this that cant and rose-water sentiment find little favor at Steenbeek. It lies not in his system of training to address the girls often about their religious state. Such personal questions lead to the opposite of what is aimed at. Hypocrisy is the common fault of these unhappy creatures. When examined about the state of their souls, they like to indulge in sentiment on their frames of feelings. Cant takes the place of sense, and it is proven beyond doubt that exactly those girls who live by religious feeling are most prone to fall back into a life of sinful sensuality.

The results of Magdalen institutions in Europe shows that one out of three of their inmates is won back to a virtuous life. Pastor HELDRING does not think that the results at Steenbeek were any more favorable than this for many years; and hence his establishment of Talitha Kumi for the care and education of neglected girls between the ages of six and sixteen.

In 1866 Pastor HELDRING made known his new plans to the Holland public, and before the end of 1866 31,864 florins had been contributed to aid his purpose. The institution has been now in successful working for more than thirteen years. Separated from the public road by a little rivulet, the handsome premises of Talitha Kumi lift up their neat, white-plastered, two-storied frame-houses in the midst of a charming garden, through a portion of which the visitor has to pass before reaching the front door. The houses form a square. The centre is occupied by a spacious yard, into which the back windows of all the apartments look. This is an imitation of mediæval convents, which were built thus to facilitate inspection. This yard is the playground and work-ground, so that playing or working, the girls can always be under the eyes of Miss NIEUWENHUYSEN and her assistants. In at Steenbeek, there are dining and work rooms, kitchen and laundry, and in addition a spacious school-room. The dormitories, each containing thirty beds, are ranged along one side of the spacious yard, each apartment having front and back windows, giving a copious abundance of air and light. "Children are like flowers," said the good pastor, "if you want them to thrive they must have sunshine and air."

Talitha has accommodation for 200 girls. They come from the lowest classes of the city—vagrants, tramps and thieves, who have been rescued from Police stations and prisons, dens and alleys. The immense deal of patience and trouble it has required to make these wild and disorderly children out of them half-reasonable creatures cannot be told. Sometimes the attempts were at their wits' ends. But as every different kind of labor was thoroughly taught, the children gradually acquired good habits of order and work. When kitchen, laundry, dormitories and garden work are done, they all meet in the school-room, and there, under the eye of the teacher, Needle-work, though sometimes, never a wonderful opportunity of forming a correct estimate of a girl's character. Bodices, gown there is kept up conversation between teacher and scholar. They chose to walk, as they wanted to [illegible] was procured, and they set out one Summer morning of 1866. Arrived there, they sat down themselves at the entrance of a heath, which, like the ocean, was limited to the eye by the horizon only. It was a desert of sand, dotted here and there with scanty bushes and weather. A fresh breeze blew from the north-west, and the sand, whirled about by the wind, wrapped the travelers in an impenetrable cloud. With eyes, ears and hands over their mouths they stumbled on blindfold. It was like Sahara. Every now and then they were compelled to lie down behind a knoll to draw breath. At last the last walk consisted merely of short runs from mound to mound. Thus, fighting against wind and sand, sinking half-way to their knees, and opening their eyes with reluctance, they succeeded in gaining the top of a hill, from which across another heath Hoenderlo could be descried. It looked like an island in the ocean. Passing across the second less barren heath, they reached the first habitation. It was the hut of a poor widow. She received the strangers with kind surprise. A visit of gentlemen to this citizens' dwelling was counted as a white raven. She told them all they wanted to know about the origin and present condition of the place. "God," she said, "has brought us here to save us from starvation." Taking the strangers into the oak-field, which her children's industry had won from the sand, she grasped a theatre of running streams and showing them with a beaming face, continued, "Look here, Sirs, isn't our Lord a wonderful God? Only a few years ago this spot was a bare wilderness, and now He has made it a garden to feed the widow and her children."

Upon inquiry, the pastor and his friend found that though sturdy labor, which would not be beaten back, had made Hoenderlo what it was, yet that the people, in the main, were worse than irreligious and ignorant. Indeed, with but few exceptions, they were robbers and poachers, accustomed to spend a portion of their time in the Arnheim Prison. They were altogether destitute of religious instruction. Some were, indeed, owners of a Bible, but there was neither church nor public service on Lord's Day.

"You see," said the woman, "God has blessed us beyond what we could think; but still we are in need of three important things—a well, a school and a church."

"Why, have you no well hereabouts? How do you get your water?"

"That's often a very difficult question, Sir. We put tubs between the hills, and thus try to catch the rain that filters through the sand. But the hot dry season we are often without a drop, and are compelled to walk several miles to get a pitcherful."

"Dear me! That must take a great deal of the people's time and hamper them much in their labor."

"Of course it does. But still this is not our greatest misery. The most urgent thing we are in need of is a school."

They took leave of the good woman.

"Indeed," said the pastor, "preferring a school to a well proves a good spirit. I wonder whether it is the spirit of the whole population. Let us put it to the test."

They entered a grocer's. Seating himself on a bag of salt, Mr. HELDRING began a chat with the shop-keeper. All that the woman had told was confirmed. The man also gave a touching description of the misery the people had often to suffer from lack of water. "Yet," he added, "if I were to choose between the two, I would choose a school."

Our pastor returned home, his mind quite made up to leave not a stone unturned till the Hoenderlo people were in possession of a well, a school and a church. He traveled to neighboring towns, and brought the subject before the wealthy. The well he began with as least expensive. He soon obtained the required amount, and not many months elapsed before the denizens of the village in the desert were joyfully drawing up water from the depths of the earth.

Then the active minister traveled to Amsterdam, the Hague and Rotterdam, speaking everywhere to Christian friends about a school for Hoenderlo. A single year produced an infant school, but nearly eight had elapsed before the large school was completed.

Meanwhile the place flourished. It became an attractive spot to many a struggling father of a family. Population rapidly increased. The dwellings were peopled out. Gardens and meadows gained on the desert. Friends subscribed. The poor inhabitants went to work in earnest, and Government made a grant, and soon a church-spire in the centre of this "Tadmor in the Wilderness" shot upward toward the skies.

The reader will now begin to understand some of the traits of character which enabled this heavy old gentleman of three-score years and ten, whose eyes, as he answers your questions from the heavy oak chair in which he sits smoking, beam intelligence and good-humor, to enter a field of labor in middle life which has produced a harvest of good to the poor of Holland. Instead of being fenced in by piles of dusty books in a close study, he has found his knowledge in intercourse with simple-hearted rustics and abandoned outcasts. "I spent the whole day," he wrote many years ago, "among the laborers. I became acquainted with their sufferings and pleasures. I learned to suffer and rejoice with them, and that it was possible to do good without theology." It was the same with the abandoned. He studied the biographies of those whom he had rescued from the social evil, until he knew where to apply a remedy. "Of certain Mademoiselle Gondin I expected," he wrote, "to see such of those women as have conducted houses of immorality trying to seduce others. I expected to find them engaged in the horrible plan of weaving a network of devilish artifice around the younger, and I was not disappointed."

It was this personal acquaintance with the disease he desired to eradicate, that made him say thirty years ago in Rotterdam, "I will undertake to train these girls to useful labor, and to build a house that shall realise the idea of Him who forgave Mary of Magdala;" and it was sound common sense, united to thorough knowledge, that has enabled him in this regard to be since then the savior of Holland.

The Whereabouts of Sir Samuel Baker.

A correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette, writing from Egypt, says: "Dispatches have been received here from Sir SAMUEL BAKER, PASHA up to the 23d of October, when he was at Gondokoro, in north latitude 4° 55', on the White Nile, which he had reached with his flotilla after overcoming unheard-of difficulties, owing to the choked state of the Bahr-el-Ghazal from rushes and shallows. He was obliged to cut channels by hand-labor in some places, and in others to run dams across the stream of 100 yards in length to prevent the steamers and large boats being permanently grounded. By this means, through backwater and lakes, he was enabled to get from the Bahr-el-Ghazal to the part of the White Nile, above its impassable shallows north of Gondokoro. Sir SAMUEL and Lady BAKER and Sir SAMUEL'S nephew, Lieut. BAKER, R.N., were all well, as also Mr. HIGGINBOTHAM, who thought he had had been suffering from fever. The Egyptian troops had not been so proof against the climate and hard river-work as the negro troops, particularly those of them who had been in Mexico. A good deal of inconvenience had been experienced from want of adequate shoes and gaiters, the leather being no match against the sharp spear-grass, from which the wounds were prone to break into ugly ulcers. Sir SAMUEL is sticking to his work like a bull-dog, determined to go on, come what will, so long as he has a man to follow him. No news is mentioned as having been received at Gondokoro about LIVINGSTONE. On the 23d of October Sir SAMUEL was on the point of starting further south. The Barri tribe of negroes about Gondokoro had proved troublesome, but had been chastised and made to respect the Egyptian authority of Sir SAMUEL."

A Forged Check—Concerted Scheme for Defrauding the Banks.

It came to light yesterday that a forged check for $3,345 35 on the Fourth National had been presented at that institution, the day before, with indications on the face of it that others like it might be uttered, or about to be. It purported to be a check drawn by NOURSE & BROOKS, cotton commission merchants, of this City, and came, in the course of business, from the Albany County Bank to the German-American Bank of this City, and by the latter was sent to the Fourth National Bank. NOURSE and BROOKS have no account with the latter institution, and the check was at once pronounced a forgery, and sent back. It was a fine lithographed, pink-tinted check, evidently printed to order, with the name of NOURSE & BROOKS in white across the face. It purported to have been printed by J. WINTS, SACKETT & CO. of this City, who say that it was not printed by them. Over the cancelling stamp had the name of NOURSE & BROOKS around the rim, and a forged certificate of the Fourth National Bank was placed on it. If any bank is the loser by this forgery, it is the Albany County Bank, to which it was returned. Efforts will be made to ascertain who was the perpetrator of the forgery, but at present there seems to be little chance of success. Meantime the banks should be on their guard against similar forgeries.

SATURDAY, Feb. 17—P. M.

The Bank return is on a declining movement in all departments. The general line of Deposits is down $8,322,300, of which $1,682,900 was lost in Gold and $955,800 in Greenbacks. The Loans are down $510,900, and the Circulation is down $12,500. The surplus of Lawful Money, over 25 ⅌ cent., to Deposits and Circulation, is reduced by the present return $1,805,000, leaving the present surplus over 25 ⅌ cent. $3,768,100.

The Money market worked easy through the day at 7 ⅌ cent., with exceptional loans to the Brokers below this rate, at the close of bank hours.

The sales of Gold were generally at 110½ ⅌ cent., as on Friday. The speculation in the Gold Room continues dull, and the prices kept steady by trade orders to buy for Custom-house and Exchange purposes. Exchange is steady at 109½ ⅌ cent. for sixty days, and 110 ⅌ cent., short sight.

The Stock market has been a shade weaker on the Public Funds, although the Cable quotations for United States 5-20s and the New Five ⅌ Cents from London show a steady confidence abroad. The Southern State Bonds are 1 ⅌ cent. higher on Tennessees, and ½@¾ ⅌ cent. better on South Carolinas, while Virginias, Consolidated, fell off 1½@2 ⅌ cent. The Railway Mortgages were generally steady. The speculation in the Railroad and Miscellaneous Shares was of an undecided temper. The bearish feeling was, perhaps, predominant; but most of the prices seemed to yield with reluctance, and the buying was quite equal to the offering in Union Pacific, Western Telegraph and a few other Stocks. After the late Boards the following quotations were made as compared with Friday night:

BANKING AND FINANCIAL.

☞ ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD COMPANY'S FIRST MORTGAGE SINKING FUND LAND GRANT BONDS,

BEARING EIGHT PER CENT. (8 ⅌ ct.) INTEREST, PAYABLE IN GOLD FREE OF TAX,

AND IN DENOMINATIONS OF $1,000, $500 AND $100, can be obtained from the undersigned, or through the principal banks and bankers throughout the United States.

The attractive features of these securities are recognized in the fact that, although they have been but a short time on the market, they are nearly all absorbed, and but a small amount are now for sale.

They combine a perfect security with a liberal rate of interest. This interest account is made light for, and easily borne by, the Company, through the operation of the Sinking Fund created from sales of the Company's land, which, in many cases, draw interest at the rate of ten (10) per cent. per annum. The security behind them is ample in every particular, as they constitute a first and only mortgage on a trunk line of railroad which will soon connect the City of St. Joseph, Mo., (an important railway centre,) with the Union Pacific Railroad, at Fort Kearney, materially shortening the distance between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. In addition to this, the bonds have further security in the fact that there is included in the Mortgage the Company's magnificent lands, amounting to 4,000,000 acres, known to be among the best in the United States. The Mortgage indenture prohibits the sale of these lands at less than Four (4) Dollars per acre, and payable to the Trustees under the Mortgage, for the clear and express purpose of retiring these Bonds. The amount thus realized exceeds the entire amount of Bonds which can be issued, and leaves the road, property and franchises free.

The Bonds have three years to run, with interest at Eight per Cent., free of tax, payable in February and August in each year.

Both principal and interest are payable in gold.

The principal in New-York. The interest in either New-York, London or Frankfort-on-the-Main, at the option of the holder, without notice, and in the gold currency of the country in which they are presented. They are coupons or registered.

Trustees—Farmers' Loan and Trust Company.

The present price of these Bonds is 91½ and accrued interest in currency, from Aug. 1, 1871. But they are receivable at par and accrued interest in payment for lands sold by the Company. The right is reserved to advance the present selling price without notice.

Maps, circulars, documents and full information furnished on application.

Though acting as agents for the sale of this loan, our firm buy and sell in their regular business the Bonds of the St. Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company, those of the Eastern Division, eight per cent. (8s.) recently placed by us at 91½, being now quoted at from 101½ to 102½ and accrued interest.

TANNER & CO.,
Bankers, No. 11 Wall-st.

☞ Investors who are in search of a perfectly safe and highly profitable security, which can be obtained at a reasonable price, would do well to examine the claims of the First Mortgage 7 Per Cent. Land Grant Gold Bonds of the West Wisconsin Railway. These Bonds have only fifteen years to run, and are secured by a railroad already in successful operation, and by a land grant of 1,000,000 acres. Sold at 92½ and accrued interest in currency by WHITE, MORRIS & CO., No. 18 Wall-st., and GWYNNE, JOHNSTON & DAY, No. 16 Wall-st., who will furnish pamphlets and particulars.

☞ THE CHICAGO, DANVILLE AND VINCENNES FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS are for only $16,500 per mile, UPON A FINISHED ROAD, WHICH IS DOING A LARGE AND PROFITABLE BUSINESS. For sale at 90 and accrued interest.

GRILLPARZER.

The Death and Burial of the Austrian Poet.

Vienna (Jan. 25) Correspondence of the London Times.

In one of the narrow streets of the inner town, the Spiegelgasse, stands one of those four-storied houses of the old type, a sort of human beehive, divided into ever so many separate apartments, each the home of a family. No stranger would notice it, for it looks very much like its neighbors; but no real Viennese would pass it without casting a glance at the windows in the fourth floor, where, if it was early enough in the day, he might catch a glimpse of an old gentleman with bushy gray hair and strongly-marked and rather heavy features, looking down into the street. But on certain anniversaries—above all, on the 15th of January—the unpretending old house was quite a point of attraction for all that is prominent in any sphere of life in Vienna. Numerous wreaths and flowers were sent up to that fourth floor, and visitors followed each other in rapid succession to bring their silent tribute to GRILLPARZER, the first living poet of Austria. Gay and lightheartedness the people of Vienna are, they are capable of warm and lasting attachment to their favorites, and there were few such general favorites as that rather rough and capricious old man, who seldom came to the municipalities when he appeared in public, as, for instance, in the final debate on the confessional laws in the Upper House, of which he was a member, that gray head attracted more attention than any of the figures in brilliant uniforms covered with stars and orders. There was something mysterious about the very house in which he lived; it was instinctively felt that there was a whole romance hidden in it. There was some very strong link between the three old maids who owned the house and their lodger. For more than fifty years the poet had been engaged to one of them, whom he named his eternal betrothed. When in early life he wished to marry her, there were peculiar difficulties in the way of an union between the small functionary, the poor unknown poet, and the maiden, who had a hard struggle to gain her livelihood by giving lessons. But why the union was celebrated no later, when, though not rich, both had gained the modest competency which would have been sufficient for their wants? This was the romance of the poet's life. Love changed into warm friendship which lasted up to the end. In 1856 the friends of the poet, not feared for him, lonely as he was in those troublous and dangerous times, induced him to become a lodger of the three sisters. Their mother had just died, and he took the rooms in that fourth floor which had become vacant by her death, and where he himself breathed his last on the 21st inst., a few days after his eighty-seventh birthday. Austria has seldom honored her poet celebrities. Every year seems to demand its tribute. Last year it was TROEBTHORN, the sailor, the year before that of HESS, the soldier, and this year it is GRILLPARZER, the poet. Great as the loss will be felt as far as the German tongue reaches, it is softened by the thought that death has only cut the thread of that precious life when it had long outrun the allotted span of threescore years and ten. It left him time to chase away the clouds which so long obscured his star, and to take up his position as the first living poet in the German tongue, and, perhaps, the greatest poet Austria can boast of. More than any one else, it was he who kept up that spiritual link which connects Austria with Germany, and all his works—dramatic and lyric—breathe enthusiasm and affection for that particular Fatherland. He loved his country with all the fire of youth and the tenacity of old age—this country of an outpost, as its name indicates, of Germany, but still living a life of its own. For preference, he chose the episodes of Austrian history as the subjects of his dramatic muse, and even the three posthumous dramas which he left behind—the "Castelian Queen," and the "Fraternal Strife in the House of Austria"—indicate that up to his last moment he remained true to his earliest aspirations of being the Austrian poet par excellence. All Vienna followed him to his grave, when lies close to that of Beethoven, and between those of Schubert and WEIMBRECHT, in the cemetery of Währing, where rest the remains of most of those who have made Austria illustrious. Those numberless wreaths and flowers which were sent to decorate the coffin of the poet, and those hosts of mourners who came to have one last look at his cold features, clearly represented the deep interest which was felt all over the town; it found its expression in the thousands who lined the road along which the funeral cortège proceeded. It went first to the Church of St. Augustin, where the religious ceremony was performed, and thence to the Währing Cemetery, out in the churchyard. It was but the author of some poems and some dramas that was buried, and yet a hero and king might have envied him this last popular tribute. At the grave, DINGELSTEDT, the director of the Court Theatre, the oldest of the many friends of the poet, and LAUBE, his predecessor, and an intimate friend of the poet, addressed the assembled crowd; the first to take leave of the Austrian poet, the second to say a last farewell to the man. Yet eloquent as both these addresses were, the note of the poet's old servant were, perhaps, the most impressive. A faithful friend, who read his plays to his cook, the poet had been in the habit of sending her to the theatre whenever his dramas were played to report upon them. Sensitive as he was, he never went himself, but, as it were, kept up the connection between himself and the public by this method.

Logansport, Crawfordsville and Southwestern Railway, of Indiana.

Price 95 and Accrued Interest.

This Road, ninety-two miles in length, seventy of which are in actual operation, runs south-westerly from Logansport to Rockville, passing centrally through five of the wealthiest and most productive Counties of Indiana, hitherto without railway facilities, and penetrating for Twelve Miles at its Southern terminus the Celebrated Block Coal Fields of Parke County, it affords the shortest existing outlet to Chicago, Toledo, Detroit, Fort Wayne, Logansport and all other intermediate points for the Block Coal, (now in such large demand,) Lumber, Cattle, Grain and other surplus products of this rich Agricultural and Mineral section of the State.

For the present we offer a limited number of these First Mortgage Bonds at 95 and accrued interest, in currency, or will exchange them for United States Bonds or other marketable securities at the rates of the day.

At the above price these Bonds yield to the investor 60 per cent. more income than the Bonds of the United States, and we unhesitatingly recommend them to all classes of investors as offering the most ample security and liberal returns.

Further and full particulars, with Pamphlets and Maps, furnished by us on personal or written application.

Continuation of the Insurance Investigation by the Assembly Subcommittee.

The Testimony Elicited Yesterday—Revelations Concerning the Farmers' and Mechanics' Company — Witnesses' Opinion of Judge Barnard—$1,000 Paid for One Hour's Work.

The legislative investigation into the conduct of Superintendent GEORGE W. MILLER, of the State Insurance Department, was continued yesterday. The Subcommittee, Messrs. AIKEN, BABCOCK, and TOBEY, were all present, the latter in the chair.

TESTIMONY OF JAMES W. WIGGINS.

The proceedings commenced with the examination of JAMES W. WIGGINS, Cashier of the Nassau Fire Insurance Company, of Brooklyn. He said that this Company had been examined by Mr. SOUTHWICK, who showed, he thought, his authority to act as Commissioner; he charged them $200; he gave no notice for the examination, only that from the Company's statement he deemed it necessary; he examined the assets. I only state, said the witness, what I heard from the Vice President—our capital was $1,000,000.

Mr. MILLER—Let it be understood that these examinations are not all made for the purpose of giving reports. That is discretionary with the Superintendent. Today no officer of a bank can go and demand and obtain a report of an examination of his company or bank.

Mr. WIGGINS continued and said, "I don't know, but guess Mr. SOUTHWICK was there Nov. 2 and 3, and he was occupied, I guess, an hour and a half or so each day. I can't say whether the officer testified under oath." [Check for $200, to the order of R. A. SOUTHWICK, and so indorsed, exhibited.]

TESTIMONY OF A. H. HORBEY.

Mr. A. H. HORBEY, Actuary of the Merchants' Life Insurance Company, said that this Company was examined by Mr. MILLER in November, 1870; he thought it took about two hours; the charge was $40, which was all that was paid for that examination. [Bill produced; also check to order of and indorsed by GEO. W. MILLER.] The demand for that examination was first made by an insurance paper; then the President requested it on account of the persistent attacks made by Mr. ENGLISH; the Company was then young, and did not need long to be examined; the President, for mismanagement, was afterward requested to resign, and did so; their capital was then impaired; the gross amount of capital was $140,000.

TESTIMONY OF R. J. TODD.

Mr. R. J. TODD, formerly Chairman of the Committee to close up the affairs of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Life Insurance Company, testified as follows: The capital stock was $215,000; there was considerable dissatisfaction in consequence of the management of Mr. McMURDY, then President, who afterward was defeated at the election for officers; Gen. CASSIUS M. CLAY, of Kentucky, was afterward elected President; the Peabody Company was merged into the Farmers' and Mechanics', with a capital of $52,000, making $172,000 in all; in January, (4th,) I think 1871, as we were about to examine the Company ourselves, Mr. MILLER, accompanied by Mr. SOUTHWICK and others, entered and commenced the examination; we were very glad, because we wished to know just how the Company stood; I think the examination occupied about eight days, but am not sure that he made out our liabilities to be $62,000 over the assets; this included $23,000 of the Peabody Company, and, taking our reinsurance into account, we had $103,000; we feared that a receiver might be appointed, and we asked that we should have every chance to save ourselves; Mr. MILLER said that nothing should be done until we had been notified; in the afternoon, he came in with Deputy Attorney-General HAMMOND, and the receiver, JAMES H. COLEMAN, and took possession of the office, and, for the first time, we were notified that JAMES H. COLEMAN was made receiver; on Tuesday we appeared in Court with our counsel, Mr. ORLANDO BREWSTER, to show why the injunction should not be made permanent; Judge BARNARD said it might as well be made permanent, and in a few minutes it was done; our object, then, was to do what we could to make up the deficit, pay the receiver, and secure what we could of our capital at Albany; I was then appointed on a committee to see what we could do in that matter and had an arrangement made with the National Life Insurance Company to reinsure our risks; at the time Mr. MILLER made the report, he told me that the amount required for reinsuring the risks was $103,000; I told him that we felt sure that it would not require that sum; we wanted time to overhaul our books and policies; I afterward agreed with the National Life Company of Chicago to reinsure the risks for $51,500; we thought we could then pay all of our debts, and save about fifty per cent. of our deposit at Albany, which amounted to $100,000; we were told by Mr. E. R. MEAD that nothing should be done toward reinsuring our risks until we had been notified; we tried to find him, but could not; subsequently our counsel entered the Committee meeting with the intelligence that all our risks had been reinsured by Mr. MEAD with the Empire Mutual Company for $97,000, and the matter was closed; consequently our meeting was all broken up, and that was the end of us; two or three days after that our furniture was all sold at auction, and then we were deprived of doing anything to protect ourselves. [The witness was severely cross-examined by Mr. MILLER as to the condition of affairs of both the Farmers' and Mechanics' and the Peabody Companies, which he acknowledged that he knew was bad.]

Mr. MILLER said that he proposed to show the character of Mr. ENGLISH—a villifier and vagabond upon the face of the earth, who had written newspaper articles, &c., and was the real instigator of the present prosecution. He denounced, in the name of the people of the State of New-York, that testimony impeaching the character of that man should not be choked off. He would, by competent witnesses, prove all that he had promised in the matter.

Mr. BARNES claimed that such a line of evidence had been ruled out by the Committee at their last week sessions, and he hoped it would not be permitted again.

The Chairman said that for the present the point would not be argued, but the Committee would consider it and announce their decision then after.

Mr. TODD, cross-examined by Mr. MILLER: I was present at the examination every day; I think the Peabody Company had not been properly managed; they wanted $100,000, but could not raise it; I don't remember the total amount that was at the Company had; there were other debts—about $20,000 in all, consisting of debts due to individual bills, unsettled claims, &c.; well, perhaps more than $20,000; Mr. CLAY was not present at the examination; I can't tell the exact date of the examination; I know that Mr. McMURDY called on you; he told me he had been to you and you had informed him as to the result of the examination, and he then knew the condition of the Company; this was upon a Sunday evening during the examination; we talked over the matter, and knew that the examination disclosed the fact that something must be done to raise money; I heard you speak of the fact that the books showed that gross frauds had been perpetrated; I did not know at that time that the National Co-operative Company of Chicago had been refused admission to do business in this State; I did not know that the receiver had written to various respectable companies in this State inviting them to reinsure our risks; you stated to me that you would do all you could to have the receiver discharged if we would relieve the Peabodies amounting to $23,000, by raising the amount within a reasonable length of time; you said you felt a sympathy for the Peabody folks; I did not know that Mr. CLAY said that the necessary amount could never be raised; all I know of the reinsurance is what has been told to me; the amount on the books, for fifteen months of the history of the Company, as having been paid for printing, stationery and advertising, is $68,000; I attribute the misfortune of the Company to extravagance, bad management and quarreling among the directors; I think that the additional capital would have been raised if five or six of the managers had come out in a card, stating that they had long since resigned, and had nothing to do with the management of the Company; I know that a paper published by STEPHEN H. ENGLISH attacked the Company previously, and pronounced it a rotten concern.

TESTIMONY OF DANIEL SICKLES.

Mr. DANIEL SICKLES, of the Masonic Agency, said for the three days prior to the closing up of the Farmers' and Mechanics' a director, said that he could not be found anywhere; he had become so disgusted with the whole matter that he had tried to forget it; his money was gone, and the less he thought of it the better; the closing of officers took place on Friday; he would not assume control of the Company until an examination was had to show their position; the Committee, consisting of Mr. POOLE, of the American National Bank, and two others, whom they considered as competent accountants, was appointed to examine the books; the examination was commenced on Saturday; Sunday was New-Year's Day, and Monday was observed as such, and [illegible] was done; Tuesday Mr. MILLER and three or four inspectors walked in and took the keys, claim they kept still the 7th; the books were all in confusion; they tried to get the books to see how they stood, but they were in the hands of Mr. MILLER, and they could not get at them; just before noon on the 8th, he said he would call in an hour and tell us what to do; at two o'clock he walked in with the receiver and his corps of officers; whereupon thunder-struck, and said, "Mr. MILLER, this is a room!" "How so! this was all that I could do," he replied. I was pretty mad, said the witness, and considerably excited and said, "With all due respect to you, I don't know Judge BARNARD nor the color of his hair, but I would rather be in the hands of Gideon, the pirate, than be in his!" the Judge heard of what I had said, and afterward sent me word to keep my mouth shut, or he would put me in the Tombs; so I kept my mouth shut until now. [Laughter.] I don't know about the reinsurance except what I have heard; I paid $100 to Mr. MILLER for the one-fifth of one per cent. on the transfer of securities; I am not an actuary; I was one of the organizers of the Peabody Company.

Cross-examined by Mr. MILLER: I did not know that the Peabody Company was in a rotten condition or I would not have put $50,000 into it; I would not have put it in if I had thought Mr. McMURDY would have paid it back to the debts of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Company; you called my attention to the fact that a large number of policies which had no existence were upon the books; this our Committee did not discover; I found out soon after I came into the Company that 48 was in a very bad condition; this Company and its officers had been vilely assailed in Mr. STEPHEN ENGLISH's paper; Mr. MILLER's report showed the rotten condition of the Company as the books stood then; I have no doubt of the correctness of that report.

MR. MALBONE RECALLED.

Mr. WM. E. MALBONE, Secretary of the Corn Exchange Fire Insurance Company, was recalled, and deposed as follows: The statement that I made yesterday was incorrect. Mr. MILLER here exhibited the full official testimony taken under oath, in the examination of the above-named Company, and asked the witness if his signature attached thereto was genuine, and whether the record of witness' testimony was true? The answer in both cases was in the affirmative. He also asked if witness now thought that this testimony, covering some twenty pages of legal cap, could have been taken in an hour's time, as he stated on Friday? Witness answered no, and claimed to know very little, and recollect less, of the entire matter.

TESTIMONY OF E. J. LOWBER.

Mr. EDWARD J. LOWBER, President of the Corn Exchange Fire Insurance Company, which was examined by Mr. SOUTHWICK in October, 1870, testified that Mr. SOUTHWICK was there parts of two days, for which he was paid $200; Mr. MILLER made another examination in December last, at their request, on an application to reduce the capital; he was there parts of four days; he did not ask anything, but when he left we asked and he said to send a check to Albany; he did not say any amount; they sent him a check for $150, [check shown] both examinations were thorough and excellent; they gave the check for expenses and services, and they thought it was very reasonable for his coming several times.

TESTIMONY OF EDWIN W. BRYANT.

Mr. EDWIN W. BRYANT, an actuary formerly employed by the Insurance Department of this State, said: I assisted in making an examination of the Mutual Protection Life; I was paid $10 for my expenses, which were $60; I received nothing for services; Mr. SOUTHWICK assisted me; we commenced on the 15th of July, and were occupied about one week; Mr. SOUTHWICK paid me the $100.

To Mr. MILLER—I have been employed in insurance matters eleven years, and have been six years an Actuary, and am now Consulting-Actuary of the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company, which, excepting one, is the largest in the world; the clerical work of a thorough examination of such a company as the Knickerbocker would occupy two competent men (worth at least a salary each of $3,000 per annum) at least one year; I should think that $3,500 for such an examination would be unreasonably small, and capable men could not be obtained for any such compensation; I don't think that there can be any really efficient supervision of the insurance department without the discretionary power of making examinations; I have mingled much with insurance men, and have known of the policy of the present and the past administrations; I have heard no complaint of Mr. MILLER's course except from the newspapers; I never knew of Mr. BARNES' making any examination of any life company during his administration; I revised the valuation of the Metropolitan Life Company, for which I received nothing—neither for services or expenses; the law gives no control to the Superintendent over the charges made by Commissioners for examinations; I think that examinations cannot well be made in any other way except by Commissioners; if this work was done by salaried attachés of the Insurance Department they would be expensive, for ordinary men could not do it, and much of their time would be unoccupied and wasted; I think that the fees of Commissioners should be fixed by law.

In reply to Mr. BABCOCK's queries, as to whether the insurance business could be conducted on a more economical plan by reducing salaries of officers and commissions of agents, &c., the witness said: If I was president of an insurance company I would get a salary of $25,000 a year, and do all I could to earn it and as much more as possible, and, while doing so, I could all the better attend to the interests of the company; a capable man must be paid according to the value of his services; men who receive salaries of $25,000 per year are generally worth it; insurance, banking and manufacturing business are necessarily very expensive to conduct; the examinations made by the Insurance Department have the effect to check extravagance in the management of the companies. The witness here entered into an elaborate and scientific explanation of the philosophy of insurance, and showing that the examinations called attention to the proper limit of expense.

TESTIMONY OF EDWARD BROWN.

Mr. EDWARD BROWN, an agent of the Lancaster Fire Insurance Company, of Pennsylvania, said that Company was examined in October, 1870, for which they paid Mr. SOUTHWICK $200 in currency; their capital was $200,000, and there was a slight impairment at the time.

TESTIMONY OF W. S. PECK.

Mr. W. S. PECK, formerly Secretary of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Life Insurance, said that the capital of the concern was $125,000, and the Peabody Company was fused into the other, bringing the capital up to a total of $279,000; witness came into office as Secretary at that time; Mr. McMURDY retired and Mr. CASSIUS M. CLAY succeed him as President; that is, he was elected but did not accept the Presidency when he found out how the matter stood. [The witness corroborated the statement of Mr. SICKELS, a previous witness.] Judge BARNARD said the witness paid no more attention to the argument of our counsel than he would pay to a small fly on his nose; Mr. MILLER represented to the Court that the Company had participated in the examination of the books; we distinctly denied that statement, for we did not then know the result of that examination, and did not participate in it; I knew that the Peabody Company had tried to raise $100,000, but only got up to $70,000, and there they stuck; all the Farmers' and Mechanics' Company got from the Peabody Company was $62,000; the rest evaporated; I don't know where it went to; at the time of the examination I think there was some money in bank; I don't know; Mr. ORLANDO BREWSTER only asked Judge BARNARD for time—that's all.

TESTIMONY OF A. W. MORGAN.

Mr. ANDREW W. MORGAN, President of the Mutual Protection Life Insurance Company, said: Mr. SOUTHWICK and Mr. BRYANT examined the Company in October; we invited the examination; we paid $1,000 for it to Mr. SOUTHWICK, but I can't tell whether he was paid in currency; undoubtedly a check was drawn; about ten hours were occupied by this examination; I thought the charge was exorbitant; I thought about $250 would have been about right; I did not understand that we were obliged to pay $1,000, but heard that it was usual, and that other companies about town were paying largely; I understood that the matter was left with the Secretary, and that he thought it was best to pay it; I knew nothing as to where the money was to go to; SEWELL and PIERCE were our counsel previous to that time, and are yet; we considered their retainer was reasonable; it was a contract for three years; I decline to state the amount, as it is a private matter; they asked for the examination, which was most rigid and perfect; the report was excellent and we used it as an advertisement; I cannot say that the amount of the fee influenced the character of the report; I am a retired actuary, and we have none exclusively connected with our company; I don't know but the examination might have occupied six full days; I have seen a policy valued; it took half an hour; we had 4,000 policies at that time; we have paid Mr. PARSONS $200 for valuing our policies; I never was asked for or paid a dollar to Mr. MILLER.

MR. BRYANT RECALLED.

Mr. E. W. BRYANT, recalled, and stated that the work of valuing the policies, which was done in his room in the Astor House, was very thorough; they were gone over three times; the examination occupied six days; he did not personally see Mr. MILLER; Mr. FERMAN had repeatedly urged him to get Mr. MILLER to make an examination; the latter said that there seemed to be no necessity for it. [The witness then gave a description of the report that was made. It was simply a bare statement of facts and figures, without any extra phraseology.] Witness met Mr. SOUTHWICK at SEWELL & PIERCE's office. Some time afterward Mr. SOUTHWICK made that appointment, and there it was that he paid witness the $100; he never was there before or since, and he does not know now where that office is. In reply to a question of the Chairman as to whether witness thought that Mr. SOUTHWICK certainly earned were worth $100, he replied, "most certainly not."

TESTIMONY OF C. C. LATHROP.

CHARLES C. LATHROP, Vice-President of the New-Jersey Mutual Life Insurance Company, said that the Company was examined by Mr. MILLER, Mr. SOUTHWICK and Mr. HOLMES; it took several hours daily for about a week; they paid $400 to Mr. SOUTHWICK, and that was all; they thought the sum paid was very reasonable; they paid it by check; [check produced;] the Company had been threatened by an insurance paper, and they asked Mr. MILLER to make the examination;
